DEDICATION

We are privileged to dedicate this 1959 edition of the HUTTLESTONIAN
to
MR. and MRS. EARL J. DIAS in appreciation of their inspiring leadership and friendship both in and out of the classroom.

FOREWORD

We are living in an age of missiles and satellites. Educators are constantly emphasizing the need for more intensive study of mathematics and science in our schools. However, in this helter-skelter race to the stars, we are in peril of forgetting the basic principles of life in a civilized society. It is for this reason that we have chosen mythology as the theme of the 1959 "Huttlestonian". Although the ancient Greeks and Romans worshipped pagan gods and knew nothing of the marvels of atomic energy, they succeeded in creating highly cultured civilizations. Much of their code of life is reflected in their myths and legends. It is our hope that this yearbook will be a symbol of the strength and virtue of the mythical heroes.

Poema Fairhavena

Of books and the students I sing; as they first from the primary schools,
E. Anthony, Rogers, Job Tripp, and the rest, did converge at that place,
Which is known as old F. H. S.

An edifice stately and grand, an opus in marble and stone
Built high on a hill; from its portals is seen the great Flumen Acushnet.
So it stands, this great temple of Pallas.

The torch did our warriors hold high as they marched forward onto the field,
In deep blue and white, row by row. And they valiantly pressed on to gain Splendid victory over the foe.

They'll always remember the gala festivities — dances and proms;
When gentlemen came in their chariots with fair nymphs in gowns bright and gay;
And they danced till the first light of dawn.

This sacred domain of Athena is cherished by students all;
And though they may never return here, they know that their spirits for aye
Will linger in these hallowed halls.

Of books and the students I've sung; as they now from these portals depart
To lands where they'll seek joy and peace, and where wander they must as Aeneas of old,
'Til the crest of Olympus they reach.

IN TRIBUTE

Ever since mythological times, men have been doing noble deeds or performing services to benefit mankind. Very often, however, these services are rendered without reward, and, perhaps even without recognition. It is for this reason that the Huttlestonian would like to pay tribute to Chester M. Downing, principal of Fairhaven High School. For more than twenty years, Mr. Downing has worked unstintingly to give the best educational training possible to the youth of our community. Moreover, he has taken a personal interest in the many clubs and activities in the school, thus helping to strengthen the moral fiber of the students. This job is surely a difficult one, and it is probably very often a discouraging one. Certainly one cannot help but admire a man who has devoted so much of his life to the service of others.

FAIRHAVEN HIGH SCHOOL

OFFICE OF THE PRINCIPAL

To the Class of 1959:

You have chosen to use Greek mythology as the theme of your issue of the Huttlestonian.

Our Bible tells us that God created man in his own image and that he loves man and wishes the best for him always. This is obviously a much loftier conception than that of the ancient Greeks who created gods in their own image, attributed to them traits both good and bad, and were never sure whether their gods would use their power to help or hurt mankind.

Sometimes the people of this early day put us to shame in the matter of gratitude. When they believed a god had helped them they poured out before his altar their sweetest wine and burned upon his altar some of their choicest possessions.

How often do we say a word of appreciation concerning those who have provided pleasant home life for us, those who have made our education possible, or our God who has preserved us even to this day and placed us in this good land.

The myths show people acting up to the best light they had, feeble though that light was. If we with our clearer understanding of God and his universe were to live up to the best ideals of conduct we know, the world would be a better place.

As you go out to join the throng of F. H. S. graduates, use the education you have acquired here for your own good and for the good of others and remember to express your gratitude by your words and deeds.

Sincerely,

CHESTER M. DOWNING,
Principal

In this era of missiles and atomic bombs, we give recognition to the top honor students. "Brains above brawn" is the slogan of today's youth, for the intellectual teen-ager of today will be the leader of tomorrow. We are proud of these honor students and hope that they will be a source of encouragement to the students of Fairhaven High School.

Class Officers

The quality of leadership is a most important characteristic and is developed only through personal experience. Even in high school the significance of this attainment is of great import due to the fact that officers of the various classes hold tremendous responsibility.

The four officers of the senior class have displayed remarkably this outstanding potential. Not only have they the weighty task of planning graduation exercises, but also the arrangements for the senior play, prom, banquet, and class gift are under their supervision.

Chosen by the class as a whole, these students have another great responsibility for the future. Reunions and other class activities subsequent to graduation fall entirely on their shoulders.

Therefore, we dedicate this page to Raymond Arruda, Elizabeth Radcliffe, Andrea Kucharsky, and Marianne Marques for their devoted service to the Class of 1959.

Senior Memories

*Old friends, good times, bright thoughts, farewells, all these —
The things with which we shape our memories.*

Class History

It was a far cry from the days of ancient Greece when the Class of '59 entered the portals of Fairhaven High School in the fall of 1955. Our first class officers were David Knox, President; Bill Robinson, Vice-President; Judy Rose, Secretary; and Wayne Cathcart, Treasurer. With the able assistance of Mrs. Vivian Kellick, we sold Fairhaven High School letterhead stationery as our class project. In January, we worked with the Sophomore class in sponsoring the Daisy Mae Dance. As the year drew to a close, our class was greatly honored by having four of our girls selected for the cheering squad; Andrea Kucharsky, Susan Pelton, Judy Rose, and Elaine Stening.

As we entered our Sophomore year, we were led by President Elaine Stening, Vice-President Andrea Kucharsky, Secretary Polly Ann Maxfield, and Treasurer Elizabeth Radcliffe. At this time we welcomed our Mattapoietts friends to our class. Mrs. Dianne Oliveira, our class adviser, assisted us with the sale of Christmas cards. The Fairhaven High School cheering squad won second prize at the Spencer Cheering Tournament, after which Terry Castelejo, Donna Holden, and Elizabeth Radcliffe were added to the squad.

In our Junior year, Elaine Stening again held the office of President, David Knox was Vice-President, Marianne Marques was Secretary, and Raymond Arruda was Treasurer. The sale of all occasion cards was sponsored by the class as a money raising project. Mrs. Edith Cromie, our class adviser, aided us in sponsoring the Autumn Frolic with the upper classmen. Several of our classmen were initiated into the Honor Society. Our cheering squad returned from Spencer proudly bearing the fourth prize trophy. Elaine Stening was then chosen head cheerleader. Andrea Kucharsky represented us in the State House on Student Government Day.

After weeks of waiting and planning, Coronation Walk, our Junior Prom, finally arrived. In the dimly lighted auditorium, adorned with shields and flowers, Andrea Kucharsky was crowned queen by past queen, Rosemary Collins. The queen received a bouquet of red roses, while her lady-in-waiting, Elizabeth Radcliffe, was presented with an old fashioned bouquet. The girls in the Queen's Court were Lynne Cadieux, Betty Ann Doucette, Gale Foster, Donna Holden, Judy Rose, and Elaine Stenning. Each girl received a little remembrance of the occasion.

Alberta Norlander was selected to go to Turkey under the American Field Service program. At this time also, Susan Erhard and Susan Pelson were chosen to attend Girls' State. Our Boys' State representatives were Douglas Johnson, Scott Phillips, Bob Surprenant, and Allan Taylor. The Honor Society installed Marilyn Wightman as president, Gale Foster as vice-president, Andrea Kucharsky as secretary, and Diana Zieba as treasurer. Junior Day highlighted the closing of our Junior year. The members of the class and faculty wore yellow carnations for the occasion. Marianne Marques was presented with the College Book, while Bill Carruth received the Harvard Book, both of which were awarded for scholarship and citizenship.

We embarked on our Senior year led by Raymond Arruda, our president, Elizabeth Radcliffe, vice-president, Andrea Kucharsky, secretary, and Marianne Marques, treasurer. We assisted the underclassmen in sponsoring the Football Bounce. Several of the class members were initiated into the Honor Society. Marianne Marques was chosen our representative for Student Government Day in Boston, and she also received the D. A. R. Award for citizenship. Some of our classmen with theatrical ability did a splendid job of the comedy "Hi Time", our Senior play. On Friday, June 12, strains of delightful dance music will issue from the Kittansett Club, as the Senior Prom culminates our social activities as students of Fairhaven High School. As we approach graduation, we know that we shall be approaching both an end and a beginning — the end of four years of work, fun and friendship, and the beginning of adult life.

Marianne Marques '59

I Shall Remember . . .

. . . . the smiling faces. On my first day at Fairhaven High, my mind was full of doubt and apprehension. However, when I heard the happy chatter of students and saw friendly smiles, my fear turned to anticipation. From that day on, smiling faces have made pleasant my years at Fairhaven High. Some memories of my school will fade as years pass. However, the smiling faces will never be forgotten. — Susan Pelson.

. . . . mostly fleeting impressions of Fairhaven High: discussions while on the window seat in the back of the old auditorium . . . Math tests . . . "Le Petite Chose" . . . fish sticks with creole sauce . . . my Biology boyfriend, Joe Bones . . . "All Gaul is divided into three parts" . . . the balcony outside the "Huttlestonian" room . . . "The Short-sighted Lover" en Espagnol . . . Beethoven's birthday . . . the girls' locker section . . . experiments with sulfur in the Chemistry lab . . . morning bulletins . . . the philosophies of Mr. Lawton . . . the stimulating effects of being with many people . . . and, most impressive of all, the strange sensation of being a part of a modern educational system in an old world atmosphere. — Lorine Durfee.

. . . . as long as I live, the school spirit at Fairhaven High School. At every football or basketball game the players keep on playing, the cheerleaders keep on cheering, and the spectators roar and yell to help boost the morale of everyone.

When Fairhaven High School is on its way to a Victory, the players don't sit back and take it easy; they play just as hard, to bring the score up as high as possible. On the other hand, when the Fairhaven team is on its way to being badly beaten, you never see anyone giving up. The players fight to the very last second. The cheerleaders and the spectators cheer the team on to the end.

Good sportsmanship is something of which to be proud. Fairhaven High is a school that maintains good sportsmanship as an absolute "must."

Fairhaven pupils have a reputation for being good winners and good losers. This is an asset to any school. The remembrance of the excellent spirit in our school will always remain with me. — Gail Morris.

. . . . the Fairhaven High School basketball court. Often fondly referred to as the "band box," this little octagonal floor, only sixty feet long, is now slightly warped and buckled. Through the years, scores of enthusiastic young people have participated in basketball games here, playing to the very limit of their endurance. The railing encircling the elevated track has been lined with hundreds of eager, jubilant faces, not only of Fairhaven fans, but of eager students from other schools.

Through the years, many unforgettable evenings have been spent here, dancing to a rally-dance, or a class sponsored prom. The decorations, so cleverly arranged, the many friends, and the company of that "special" girl or boy have endeared this gymnasium to all F. H. S. students.

Even during the football season, our basketball arena is not forgotten. The walls are covered with colorful, eye-catching posters urging the football team to victory, and the whole room often reverberates with the cheers and drumbeats of the rallies at the other end of the tunnel.

Even though our teams now play on a fine new gym floor, I shall forever hold a fond remembrance of the Fairhaven High School basketball court. — David Knox.

. . . . Mr. Parkinson. Never have I seen a teacher with a keener sense of humor, a better eye for the girls, and a stronger hate for hotrodders. His way of teaching was unique; he could teach you things in such a way that you didn't know you were being taught. He did more than teach mechanical drawing and painting; many of his subtle lessons were on citizenship. If you needed a friend, he was it. If you needed to be taken down a peg or two, he did it. He was one you could go to for help or counsel. Many found that he was just as good on the long as the short end of a joke. To him a mistake is human weakness, and when you didn't make one, that was when he started to worry. In the years to come, when I think back at my years in F. H. S., I am sure I shall always remember "J. P." — Michael Lopes.

. . . . our little octagonal gym floor. On my first visit to Fairhaven High School, I was over-awed to see lovely marble walls and floors, magnificent wood carvings, and beautiful colored windows. Strangely, however, to me, the most surprising and delightful feature of our high school was the newly varnished gym floor!

As I walked across its gleaming, polished surface, watching my own reflection smiling at me, I couldn't help but think of all the students before me who had attended basketball games, dances, and gym classes held in this room in the past. I was somehow made to realize that the best years of my life were balancing on the very tips of my fingers waiting to be firmly grasped; and, as I continued on through the gym and into the tunnel at the opposite end, I thought, "I shall always remember that mirrored floor, for it has given me a glimpse of the future! — Gale Foster.

. . . . the old auditorium. Everything about the dark and quiet hall casts a spell of peace and contentment, from the polished mahogany carvings to the dusty sunlight streaming through the back windows onto the warm marble shelf.

I have sat there and closed my eyes, just to smell the polish and wood aroma, and then have opened them to the indescribable beauty of the high-domed ceiling and darkened panelled walls. Three stiff, high-backed chairs squat on the stage, a worn piano, and heavy blue velvet curtains are reminiscent of Honor Society rehearsals and glee club practices.

Is that the ghost of Henry Huttleston Rogers flitting amongst the empty rows of forlorn seats? One cannot tell for all is bathed in stillness and shadows. It seems probable though, for anything could happen in such an unforgettable "wonder of the world" as our old auditorium. — Pat Martin.

. . . . Beethoven's birthday, not for its musical significance but for its humorous revival in the comic-strip "Peanuts". Caught in this "Peanuts" fervor, several friends and I celebrated this event in the cafeteria. Cookies, instead of the traditional birthday cake, were consumed, and glasses of smuggled soda were held on high as we toasted Beethoven's birthday. The halls echoed with shouts of "Happy Beethoven's birthday, more or less!"

Ask anyone what day it was. The reply wouldn't be "Tuesday, December 16", but "Beethoven's birthday! Long live Ludwig!" — Jeremy Jackson.

. . . . the busrides! I shall never forget that first day as we Mattapoissett pupils boarded the bus for F. H. S., embarking on a new adventure — "green," frightened sophomores with the mighty seniors in the place of honor — the back of the bus. Only after two years of hard work, did our day finally come, and we, the dignified seniors, at last, occupied the coveted rear seats.

There are many sounds peculiar to our school bus. There are the songs sometimes chanted in unison and other times sung in competition against the low voices of the boys. There are songs for the busdriver, or for the underclassmen, or for special occasions. The soprano squeal of the girls' voices is always heard as they catch up on the latest news, and there is often the sound of laughter following a joke.

Besides the sounds, there are very peculiar sights for a rider in our school bus to enjoy. There is always the unhappy girl who over slept, barely made the bus and "didn't even have time to take the pin curls out of her hair!" Then the pupil who didn't do his homework can be seen every morning pegging away at that bit of cramming which is sure to do him no good.

I shall always remember the daily bus rides, with each day carrying us to new adventures. — Sue Erhard.

. . . . the exploding roar of cheers as I viewed a huddled mass of blue and white combatants calling off signals — a football game.

When the day began, rain poured forth from the heavens, flooding the small football stadium, and bringing much dismay to fans who had long awaited this eventful day.

A heavy drizzle continued as game time approached, but as the contest had not yet been called off, the fans dared to have hope. As they entered the stadium, however, their hopes fell when they viewed the field, a veritable quagmire.

The appearance of the team, obviously possessed by a strong determination to beat the arch-rival, sparked the drama of the afternoon.

The dismal day, and the sodden players now almost imperceptible due to the mud, seemed to have a strange effect on the fans, for the spirit and cheers continued incessantly throughout the afternoon. This determination that the game must not, and would not be lost somehow reached the team and gave it an indomitable will to win.

A bitter struggle ensued between those weary players, which finally culminated in a joyous victory. The winning of the game, and the triumph over the disliked arch-rival, demonstrated once more the spirit and fair-play which are so much a part of my memories of Fairhaven High School.— Martha Carvalho.

. . . . the picture on the north wall in Room 15A; for whenever I had a spare moment, I would look at this picture, and my mind would wander away from thoughts of homework, lessons, and books. Looking at this picture, I was no longer in a classroom but sitting on the edge of a pier, gazing into the harbor, smelling the salty air, and listening to the fog bell ringing as the fog became thicker across the bay. The feeling I got while looking at this picture on a hectic day of school was one of peacefulness and tranquillity; and although my thoughts lingered on this scene for only a few moments, I would feel refreshed and ready to continue again with the work of the moment. — Margaret Fitzgerald.

. . . descending the stairs from Room sixteen, where I had been dismissed from English class, to the cafeteria. At various intervals during the morning, I had smelled the aroma of gingerbread baking in the oven, and my mouth watered just in anticipation of this tasty dessert.

I would carry my tray through the lunch line, enter the cafeteria, and seat myself with the other Senior girls at our special table. My friends were always noisily chattering about funny incidents and exchanging juicy bits of gossip from the morning classes. Almost every day, someone would propose a toast; then we would settle down to devour the meat balls or the fish sticks or the "Dagwood Specials". I shall never forget the day that one of the girls generously sprinkled pepper on everybody's chicken pie.

Even though most of us were in a hurry to go either into the girls' room and primp before the mirror, or to race upstairs and talk to a certain boy in the halls, I still consider my lunch period as being one of the nicest parts of the school day at Fairhaven High School. — Diana Pierce.

. . . . the daily dash to lunch. As soon as the lunch bell rang, the classrooms suddenly became empty as the students swarmed out into the corridor and joined in the race.

There were always a few persons who were more eager than the rest. At a faster-than-walking but slower-than-running pace, they scurried down the corridors, winding in and out in serpentine contortions. After skipping the last two steps of the stairway, they suddenly reduced speed to a mere walk as they came within sight of the monitor. Then, again out of sight, they scooted across the gym, made a quick right turn, took a few rapid steps, slid along the marble basement floor, slammed their books on a convenient window sill, and hurried into line! Quite astonishingly, less than four hours ago, these same persons' faces had been pitifully contorted as the teacher announced, "Lunch for today: Fish sticks with creole sauce." — Andrea Kucharsky.

... the chemistry laboratory. This is only one of a labyrinth of rooms in Fairhaven High School, but it is one of the most important to me. The laboratory is stocked with test tubes, chemicals, Bunsen burners, pneumatic troughs, balances and metric weights, all instruments of science to probe into the complex world of nature.

A laboratory is a place where man can work with his mind and hands to produce new elements and compounds to make for posterity a better world in which to live.

As I enter the chemistry laboratory at Fairhaven High School, it seems to give me a feeling of challenge. I yearn to battle with nature — to ferret out secrets heretofore hidden from man's understanding. I know that this school laboratory is, indeed, the breeding ground for future scientists, potential engineers, research chemists, Einsteins, Pasteurs, and Priestleys. — Albert Talbot.

... a Memorial Day Assembly — the first such assembly I attended at F. H. S. The auditorium was filled with students who were nettled that they were forced to relinquish a study period in order to attend. Shamefacedly I admit, I was not exactly joyous to give up a study period, either. The noise in the room, heavy with the buzz and chatter of pupils who hadn't seen each other for at least five minutes, was penetrated occasionally by the strains of the entrance march.

After the hub-bub had subsided and the opening exercises had been completed, the guest speaker, "Doc" Thompson, was introduced by the principal. Little did the audience of carefree youth then realize that this was to be one of the beloved doctor's last assemblies. However, on that day, the doctor tried with his direct and meaningful, yet simple, words, to make our inexperienced minds grasp the true purpose of Memorial Day. The audience was made to realize that the holiday was a day especially designated to honor the heroic who had died in defense of their homeland, and the relatives and friends who had left the world's cares to us, the living.

Now had come the time for the recitation of "The Gettysburg Address" by the senior class president. To me, this speech had always been a meaningless jumble of words to be memorized and recited only under compulsion. However, as I listened to those historic words on that day, their meaning suddenly and surprisingly became clear to me.

The finale of the program was the playing of the inspirational "Taps." The stirring notes echoed throughout the auditorium without competition from any other sound. The entire student body and faculty of F. H. S. were silent, remembering their own loss of loved ones and respecting the loss of others.

I left the assembly with a fierce spirit of patriotism and new-found understanding of Memorial Day. — Diana Zieba.

. . . . the tangy odor of paint and paste mingled with the musty aroma of chalk and freshly-opened paper that greeted me, as I entered our tiny bird's nest art room at the top of Fairhaven High School. The familiar jostling of chairs, the constant gurgle of water flowing forth from a rusty faucet, the low, hushed murmur of conversation, the staccato sound of pens and pencils gliding across paper, and the tuneless song of paint cans as they were tossed on the shelf — all these things I shall remember.

I shall never forget the amusing convulsions of our dear old radiator, which so faithfully supplied us with heat during all the seasons, summer or winter, hot or cold; we were always hot!

Moreover, I shall recall the closeness and casualness that typified the relationships of the embryo artists as they strove for improvement and satisfaction with each new endeavor.

Despite all the handicaps in our little cramped studio, I have enjoyed every moment that I have spent within its crowded walls. — Polly Ann Maxfield.

. . . . our senior locker section. It is our own private discussion room, where the minute by minute account of daily events are divulged. This section is the place where all of our dearest friends gather in the mornings to inspect one another's wearing apparel, hear the latest gossip and "cram" for an approaching exam.

We decorated the senior section at Christmas with bows, seals, bells and all sorts of dainty streamers. A large poster of Santa Claus greeted us upon entry.

A wonderful place to be, our section acts as a cheering room before basketball games and as a "detailed discussion" room afterwards. It is a room where we may forget all the trivial disappointments of the day and just be gay and happy. — Carolyn Howland

. . . . my math teacher, and his idiosyncrasies, such as spraying chalk dust on the floor, desk, walls, and himself, and blowing on his hands. What I'll remember, though, long after I have forgotten his eccentricities, will be his genuine interest in everyone and his worldly intelligence. He strikes me as a man, who, though soft-spoken, always has a considered answer for your question. He realizes that his job is to teach math, but that his responsibility is not discharged unless he attempts to make some impression on the minds of his pupils regarding the pitfalls and dangers involved with living in the present day. He knows what he believes, and, without seeming dogmatic, is ready to express his ideas.

All of us in his classes can readily perceive that when we do well in a math test and rejoice over it, he is pleased that we are pleased. As a matter of fact, he is noticeably disconcerted when the class, as a whole, does poorly in a test. In other words, he "feels for us." His sincerity, devotion, understanding, and tenacious confidence in what youth represents are qualities to be very much admired and certainly not to be forgotten. — Barclay Megathlin

. . . . On fair days sitting during noon recess on the grass at the edge of the curved walk that lies to the east of our school. Some people sat doing last minute home work, others made plans for some after-school pursuit. A group of fellows were "getting a kick" out of recreating an amusing classroom incident that had occurred that morning. A gentle warm breeze blew through it all . . . the sky a deep blue . . . a pleasant rest from the day's labor. — Edward Coyne.

. . . . Honor Society Initiation—1958. The majestic and traditional old auditorium was occupied by proud parents all looking rather uncomfortable in their Sunday-go-to-meeting outfits; the lights of the antique chandeliers were slowly dimmed as each initiate, looking strangely and suddenly mature, solemnly received the flame for his individual candle, which symbolized the torch of knowledge. The flicker of the candles revealed the awed and serious faces of the nervous Juniors. Then, suddenly, at the peak of tension and emotion, just as the initiates hoarsely uttered the promise of allegiance, a small, intruder flapped his wings, nonchalantly flew from one impressively carved beam to another, and there the curious bat seriously observed the remainder of the ceremony. — Judy Wotton

. . . . the view from the window in the Huttlestonian Room. As I stood by this window, it seemed that a panorama of my youth was stretched out below me. The town where I had grown up, the sparkling blue of the Acushnet River, the busy traffic on the bridge, the broad sweep of the highway disappearing toward the east, the steps of the school which I had climbed so many times — all at my feet. Here I felt as if I had been lifted from life and were looking down upon it. It was indeed a strange feeling, and one that I shall never forget. — Marilyn Wightman.

. . . . walking down the greying marble halls after school was out. Every step clicked and echoed and died away to the next click of a step. Standing to listen, I heard the tapping of the typewriter keys in the office, the "good-bye" call of a student, the rustle of papers, a book dropped, the watery swish of the janitor's mop, the snap of a key locking study hall door, the slam of a desk top as another classmate made preparations to leave for home.

I opened the heavy oak door and walked down the stone steps into the brilliant, warm sunlight. Behind me lay the fascinating memories of simple things in F. H. S. that I shall remember. — Cindy Barrow.

. . . . the day that I discovered Fairhaven High School. It was not my very first day at the school, nor the day I first cheered the Fairhaven High School team, nor the day I attended the school's first assembly. It was not any of these memorable occasions, but it happened quite accidentally when I had completed some extra-work after school hours.

As I came flashing out of the classroom, I stopped quite suddenly in my tracks. Something was different! The hustle-bustle was gone, and an unusual feeling enveloped me — the feeling of a stranger introduced to a new environment.

Since no one was around, I decided to take a tour of my school all by myself. Strange as it may seem, I noticed things that I had taken for granted for many months. I was engrossed by the beautiful marble ceiling and walls, and the columns standing as erect as soldiers in the very important role of holding up a truly lovely, arched ceiling. Then I noticed the magnificent stained glass windows and wondered about the many hours the glazier's skillful hand must have worked.

I strolled up the stairs to the Huttleston Avenue auditorium where I admired the wood carving done on wall and ceiling.

From room to room, there was much to see and admire in this beautiful gift from Henry Huttleston Rogers.

It is strange, but it wasn't until that day that I felt a part of Fairhaven High School — my school — the school I love, — the school that will be so very hard to leave. — Patricia Baron

Class Will

Just as the gods on Mount Olympus bestowed all manner of divine wealth upon the mortals who worshipped them, so do we, the Class of 1959, bestow these rich gifts upon the Juniors who worship us:

I. Liz Radcliffe bequeaths her cumbersome bass fiddle to anyone strong enough to carry it.

II. Marilyn Wightman leaves her doodle book to the high school library, where it may be enshrined for posterity.

III. Bill Przybyla leaves his "Most Unpronounceable Name" title to Gus Augustyniak.

IV. Cindy Barrow leaves her bounciness to any Junior with a pogo stick.

V. After four years, Jonathon Botelho leaves Mrs. Dias some peace and quiet.

VI. Michelle Veilleux leaves her window seat in the old auditorium to any Junior girl who likes fresh air.

VII. Various members of the Senior Class bequeath various left-overs from their 1958 Beethoven's birthday parties to various Juniors who plan to celebrate the occasion next year.

VIII. Judy Sylvia bequeaths her loquacity to Anne Whittier.

IX. Tom Abel absolutely refuses to leave his baby girl.

X. Lily Samaska leaves several sketches to inspire Marion Sitnik, who we know doesn't need inspiring.

XI. Barclay Megathlin leaves his tuba, datebook, and various other incidentals to Earl, so that the latter may carry on in his brother's footsteps.

XII. Alberta Norlander bequeaths an autographed copy of her best-seller "The Fine Art of Lecturing" to Linda Browning.

XIII. Judy Rose wills assorted writing paper, pencils, and envelopes to any Junior with a lovesick boy friend at college.

XIV. Doug Johnson and Dexter Eldridge leave Fairhaven in a cloud of exhaust fumes.

XV. William Carruth leaves his scarlet blush to Anthime Brunnette.

XVI. Ilona Wesoly leaves her witty comments on life to any Junior who wishes to comment wittily on life.

XVII. Martha Carvalho and Pat Baron bequeath several pairs of worn out shoes to the members of next years advertising staff.

XVIII. Carl Maxfield leaves the F. H. S. basketball team to the Juniors.

XIX. Susan Pelton leaves her French accent to Mr. Noyes, with the provision that he loan it to any Junior in French III who might need it.

XX. The generous 1959 "Huttlestonian" editorial staff leaves next year's staff an assortment of: old candids, older cuts, unpaid bills, a broken-down typewriter, vintage 1899, a depleted supply of typewriter paper, and a third floor window which absolutely refuses to stay open.

“Coronation Walk”

The auditorium had been transformed into a gleaming palace ballroom; the walls were be-decked with stately shields and helmets; gay streamers of lavender and green added color. Bright yellow forsythia and rosy Japanese quince decorated the regal throne and sweetly perfumed the air. It was the evening of our Junior Prom.

At one side of the ballroom, lending dignity to the occasion, the Barons and Baronesses greeted us as we arrived. Radiant young princesses floated blissfully in the arms of white-coated princes, and the soft, melodious strains of the Star Dusters, accompanied by the rustles of taffeta and net and the gentle swish of chiffon, filled the great room with sound.

At nine-thirty, a hush descended over the dancers, and the plush red velvet carpet was rolled to the foot of the dais. The royal procession began as Rosemary Collins, last year's Queen, was escorted to the throne by Kenneth Lanoue. She was followed by little Andrea Cromie, carrying the sparkling jeweled crown on a white satin pillow. Next came the Queen's lovely court — Lynne Cadieux, Betty Ann Doucette, Gale Foster, Donna Holden, Judith Rose, and Elaine Stening. Elizabeth Radcliffe, the beautiful Lady-in-Waiting, followed, and last came the royal Queen, Andrea Kuchar-sky, leaning on the arm of the Lord Chancellor, David Knox.

Her royal highness was crowned by Rosemary Collins and was presented with a bouquet of red roses. The Lady-in-Waiting received an old-fashioned bouquet, and each member of the court was given a small gift.

Following the Queen's waltz, the traditional Grand March, led by the Queen and Her escort, Richard Winterbottom, marked the beginning of intermission, and refreshments were served.

At eleven-thirty, the happy but weary dancers bid adieu to the Barons and Baronesses and hastened home in their waiting carriages.

Junior Day

Great anticipation and excitement filled the air on June sixth as we, the Juniors, reached the coveted highlight of our year. Wearing yellow carnations and looking very proud, we marched into the auditorium for the annual Junior Day festivities. After the Seniors took their places before the stage, Rudolf Merten, Senior foreign exchange student from Austria, gave a touching speech of gratitude and farewell.

Awards were presented to the two most outstanding and versatile Juniors. Marianne Marques received the College Club Book Award, while Bill Carruth was presented with the Harvard Club Book Award.

We were entertained by three musical arrangements — a tuba selection by Barclay Megathlin, a clarinet solo by Richard Monteiro, and a rendition of “The Halls of Ivy” by the Junior-Senior Choir.

Our president, Elaine Stening, received the traditional class mantle from the Senior president, Barry Behn. Thus the Junior Day program was brought to a close, but to us it will always be a fondly remembered and cherished event.

Senior Play

"Maybe you could come over and see my garden sometime?" George (Dexter Eldridge) shyly inquires of Eloise (Gale Foster).

"But if we break this thing up, who's going to get Bill?" Diane (Judith Sylvia) asks Kay (Alberta Norlander).

"They were having a sale on mushrooms, so I bought 5 lbs. of them," Kathy (Carolyn Howland) proudly tells her mother (Michelle Veilleux).

"Now that we're alone Eloise . . ." murmurs Bill (Frank Perry).

"And now she's gone and put it in the paper." Bill announces to the distraught Collins family.

"All's well that ends well" for the cast of "Hi-Time".

The day was dark and dreary. Snow was falling outside, but within the walls of Larch Avenue Auditorium, a much different scene was taking place.

There was a rehearsal for the Senior Play "Hi-Time" in progress. But was it a rehearsal? Boxes were being thrown around, and in the background there was a little orchestra playing one of these new, abstract melodies on a piano and a xylophone. All of a sudden there was an extreme silence. One could have heard a pin drop. Then someone whispered, "He's coming!"

Immediately everyone grabbed his playbook and began to learn some of his lines. Meantime, He came peering anxiously around the set. "All right, places everyone," he bellowed.

Yes, this was a typical rehearsal for "Hi-Time." He was our patient director, Mr. Tunstall.

The rehearsals began around 3:30, and lasted until 5:30. Everyday, something different happened.

"Mother" Veilleux and "Dad" Coyne were always ready for their cues because they were on first in Act I. The rest of the cast would be off in a corner gossiping, or cramming for a big test. Then another silence, a sudden awakening to reality, and a mad dash up onto the stage.

It seems that we also had some trouble with the touching love scene. It wasn't romantic enough. Little did Mr. Tunstall know that "Bill" Perry was to kiss "Elsie" Foster right on stage, the night of the play — with no rehearsing?!

"Kathy" Howland had a difficult part to portray, but with the help of our director and everyone in the cast, she progressed very nicely. There was only one difficulty. The cast could never figure out what was "crawlin' up her feet."

"George" Eldridge had two personalities — offstage, and onstage. While performing, he was a shy, awkward boy, but backstage he took the roles of anything from a contented cow, to a television commercial. Incidentally, Dexter can "moo" expertly.

The three villains, "Muriel" Pelton, "Diane" Sylvia, and "Kay" Norlander not only talked excessively onstage, but everywhere else. Sometimes it was hard to tell who was talking the loudest, the actors, or the people backstage. Mr. Tunstall usually decided that for us.

"Hank" Johnson was an excellent xylophone player, as well as an actor. No one was able to decide which he was better at, since he liked to do both at the same time.

This passage may give you the impression that rehearsing for the play was easy. We had our jokes and laughs, but we also worked very hard and diligently for the final performance. With the help of capable Mr. Tunstall, and the hard-working prompters, Lynne Cadieux and Carolyn Eldridge, "Hi-Time" will certainly be written down in the books as a success. I am sure that every member of the cast will never forget the Senior Play of 1959.

Alberta Norlander '59

In the tradition of the ancient Greeks we give laurels for outstanding achievement to:

. . . . Jonathan Botelho, who in competition with other students all over the country, won a 4 year scholarship from the National Merit Scholarship Association.

. . . . Barclay Megathlin, who won the first prize in an essay contest sponsored by "Industrial Machinery News" for his composition entitled, "The Advantages of Used Metal-Working Machinery in Industry and Government".

. . . . Thomas Renahan, who defeated challengers from five other high schools to win the Greater New Bedford Voice of Democracy contest.

. . . . Marilyn Wightman, Gale Foster, Andrea Kucharsky, and Diana Zieba, who were selected as the officers of the 1958-1959 Honor Society.

. . . . The cheerleaders, Elaine Stening, Elizabeth Radcliffe, Teresa Casteljo, Judith Rose, Andrea Kucharsky, Donna Holden, and juniors Marjorie Dumas and Martha Gardner, for winning the cheerleaders' tournament at Spencer.

. . . . Marilyn Wightman and Jonathan Botelho, who were semi-finalists in the National Honor Society scholarship contest.

. . . . Marianne Marques, for winning the College Club Book Award.

. . . . William Carruth, for winning the Harvard Alumni Club Book Award.

. . . . Richard Holt, who earned a position on the All-Bristol County football team.

. . . . Alberta Norlander, our American Field Service ambassador to Turkey.

. . . . Raymond Arruda, for winning fifth place in the Class D high jump at the state championship track meet in Boston, and first place in the high jump event at the G. B. I. Meet at White Stadium, Boston.

. . . . Diana Zieba, who received a Lillian J. Kerr Scholarship from Northeastern University.

. . . . Marianne Marques, who received the Daughters of the American Revolution Citizenship Award.

. . . . Jonathan Botelho, who received a Bowdoin Scholarship from Bowdoin College.

. . . . William Carruth, Edward Coyne, Marianne Marques, Polly Ann Maxfield, Barclay Megathlin, Susan Pelton, Thomas Renahan, and Leigh Richards, who participated in the All-State Music Festival at Hyannis, Massachusetts. Barclay and Bill were selected for the fourth successive year, and Leigh for the second time.

. . . . Marianne Marques, who served as our delegate on Student Government Day to the Massachusetts House of Representatives.

. . . . Susan Pelton and Susan Erhard, who were selected to attend the 14th annual Girls' State convention at Bridgewater.

. . . . Boys' State representatives, Robert Surprenant of Fairhaven, and Scott Phillips, Douglas Johnson, and Allan Taylor of Mattapoisett.

. . . . Jonathan Botelho and Marilyn Wightman for their incredible 800 scores on the College Board Achievement.

. . . . Antoinette Grace, Leigh Richards, and William Carruth, who qualified for the Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra.

. . . . Raymond Arruda, for his second and third place awards at the CYO Diocesan track meet.

and finally ———

. . . . Marilyn Wightman, who brilliantly led the 1959 "Huttlestonian" staff in creating a literary masterpiece.

Junior Class Officers

Marjorie Dumas, Thomas Mendell, Martha Gardner, Suzanne Amaral.

This page we dedicate to the officers of the Junior Class, who for the year's duration have loyally and faithfully worked and planned for our benefit. These leaders take an active part in many extra-curricular activities along with performing numerous services for our class. Some of their responsibilities include planning the Junior Prom and supervising our money making projects. Under the leadership of these officers, the entire Junior Class participates in various activities to earn money for graduation. In all they do, our class officers represent us; their ideals become our ideals, their actions now determine our memories later; the success of our Junior Class is in the hands of these people whom we have chosen to lead us.

Thus to Martha Gardner, Thomas Mendell, Marjorie Dumas, and Suzanne Amaral, we give our thanks.

The Epic of the Junior Class

Tell us, O Muse, of that class, who, under the wrath of Zeus, wandered far and wide, seeking his forgiveness, and, gaining it at long last, crossed a turbulent river and settled in a beautiful place.

Thus it happened in the early days of swift flowing Time that the bewitching Sirens, Sylvia Hales, Lois Lessard, and Jackie Cormier, held a party, inviting all favored mortals, gods, and goddesses; but alas Zeus, Tom Mendell, and Hera, Marty Gardner, were left uninvited. Thereupon Zeus and Hera, mistaking us as evildoers, showed their anger by punishing us, banishing us from our homes, separating us from our loved ones, and forcing us to travel over the face of the earth. Henceforth we were made to wander, suffering many hardships. Sustaining our courage, we travelled eleven years, after which the Messenger of the gods, Sherm Rounsville, delivered a message from Zeus. Thus he spake:

"Come hither thou victims of hardship; ye shall be rewarded for your bravery in facing punishment wrongly given. It has been made known to Zeus through the goddess of Wisdom, Jani Morrill, that responsibility for that former infamous deed lies not with you. He will make restitution by leading you to a beautiful land."

As soon as the rosy fingered dawn shown forth, we eagerly received the forgiveness of Zeus, and with all haste set forth to the place ordained for us by the gods. Coming presently to a turbulent river, guided by the god of the Sea, Jon MacGowan, we were conveyed by the god of the Sun, Jim Carruth, with the aid of sunbeams, to the farther bank. We wanderers, travel worn and weary, with glad hearts called our land Fairhaven.

Many virtues and talents did Zeus bestow upon these, his forgiven people. The virtues of love and eternal youth did Aphrodite and Adonis bestow on Sue Whittaker and Johnny Bresnahan: Carol Ann Wyzga was blessed with Daphne's golden tresses. All the freshness and life of Aurora was given to Louise Valladoa. With the gifts of the three Graces, our own Beverlys, Bastien, Govoni, and Turner, were destined to a life of happiness. Gaiety did Mirth give to Katy Kozuch. The "Puckishness" of Cupid was relived in Mac Campbell.

Even to such an extent were we favored, that forthwith a great jealousy arose among the people on the opposite bank. Through the words of Elaine Karl, we learned of the Crimsonites' evil plan for our destruction. We, being a peaceful people, had not time to make ready before the dark prowed ships came into sight.

So it happened that the mighty Crimsonites invaded our fair land. The clashing of armor was heard throughout the land, sounding like mighty thunder roaring through the heavens. Many of our good warriors were injured, pierced by the thrustured swords and flying arrows of the foreign bands. That others were fatally wounded filled our hearts with grief, but, nevertheless, our brave men continued the raging battle. For many days our men and boys fought, now winning, now losing, always with steadfast hearts and courage. Then at a dark moment for us, wise Mentor, Andy Skeie, seeing our troubles, sent the lord of the Chariots, Jim Dobson, to search for the god of War, Jeff Jackson, in all haste, who thenceforth rode to us bringing with him Zeus. Thus Zeus spake and commanded:

"War between the Crimsonites and the Fairhavenites is henceforth forbidden. Your tests of strength will take place in the form of a contest, not a war. Any further attempts at warfare will be unforgivable. Those of you who dare to violate my commands will be destined to a life in the flames and furnaces of Hades and will be at the mercy of the god of the Underworld, Nap Holmes, and the goddess, Nancy Moore, unto eternity."

Hearing such threats, the people at once turned from their minds the horrors of war. Preparations for the coming contest were foremost in their thoughts. Thus it was that the god of Time, Earle Megathlin, set the date. When this day arrived, the Crimsonites in all their splendor came forth across the waters and took their places in the arena.

Hither came shouts of cheers, the crowd's initial yell of encouragement and hope, led by Midge Dumas. Thus commenced the dramatic events of sports to decide who was the more skilled of the Crimsonites and Fairhavenites. The mighty warriors stepped into the ring from where the discus was to be hurled. From the crowd of Crimsonites came forth ardent shouts for their indomitable master of the discus. His strong muscles flexed. A sigh of awe was unleashed as the discus rose and soared farther than any eye had ever seen. Oh, how we prayed that our mighty Atlas could, with the help of Zeus, hurl as did his opponents. Cries of zeal sprang from the Crimsonites when our Atlas could not match their incomparable Hercules; thus they quickly took the important first lead.

This advantage was not to remain theirs, for the next event was won by our Gladiators, Paul Bernard, Jim Cabral, and Joe Canto. With the winning of this event our faith was restored, and we were led to victory upon victory. Whereupon our Hermes, Sherm, competed with the swiftest runners in the land.

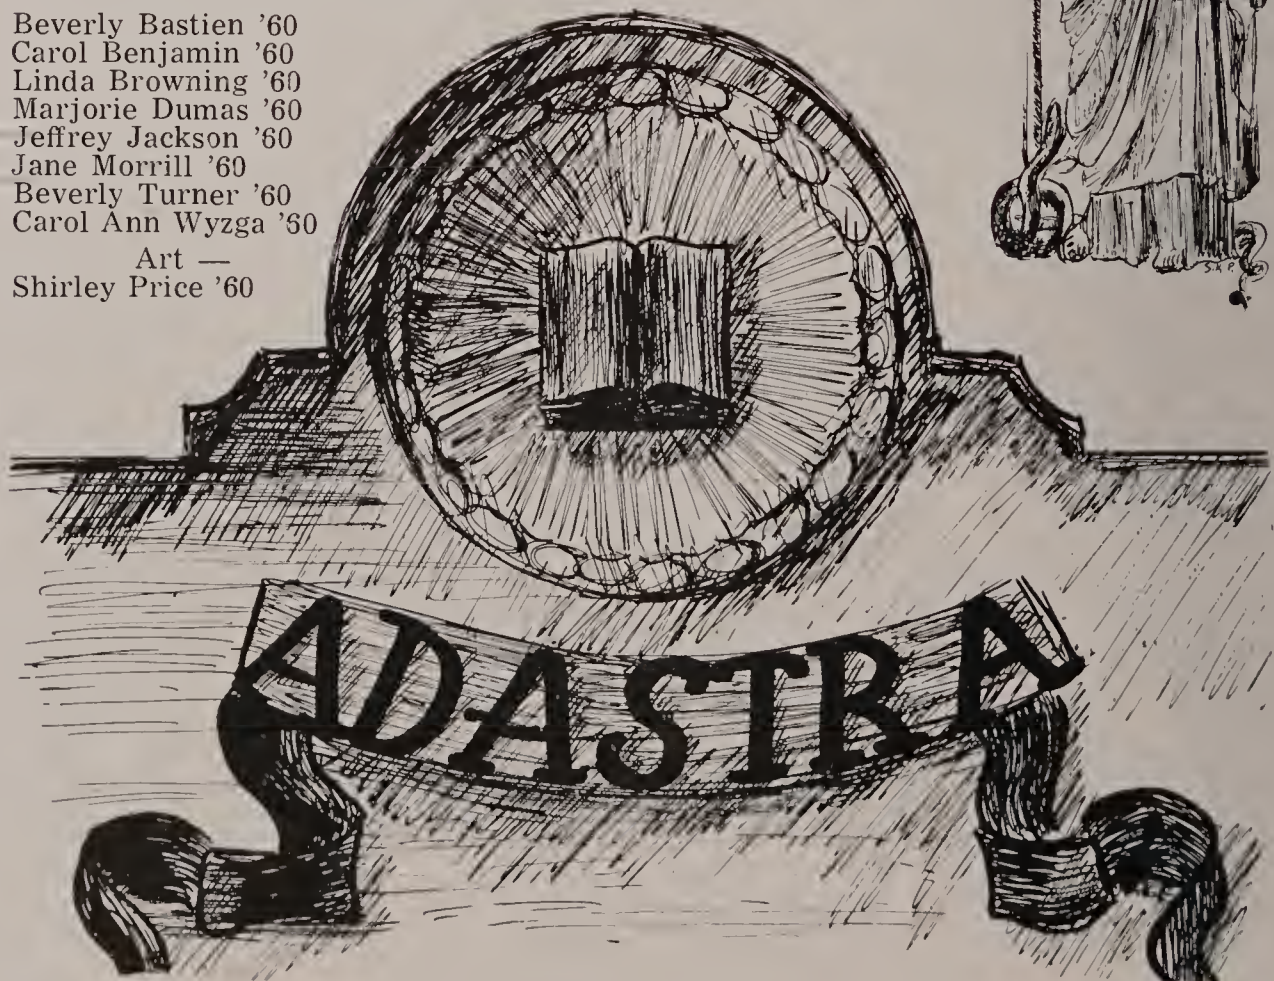

At a signal our sprinter came hither from a cloud of dust, only a span behind the mass before him. It was a struggle for supremacy. At the foremost turn strode our runner between the Crimson hero and the finishing point. Seeing the powerful strides of Hermes overcome the Crimsonite speedsters, the crowd of Fairhavenites let loose shouts of cheer. A roaring tore loose as he buried the Crimsonite in clouds of dust. Thus the contest ended.

Leading the Fairhavenites over the battlefield, where the Crimsonites had lost, was Zeus. That night our fair was bright with the fires of victory, while across the river all was dark. However, the crimsonites, being a proud people, refused to accept defeat and were already froming plans for victory in the forthcoming year.

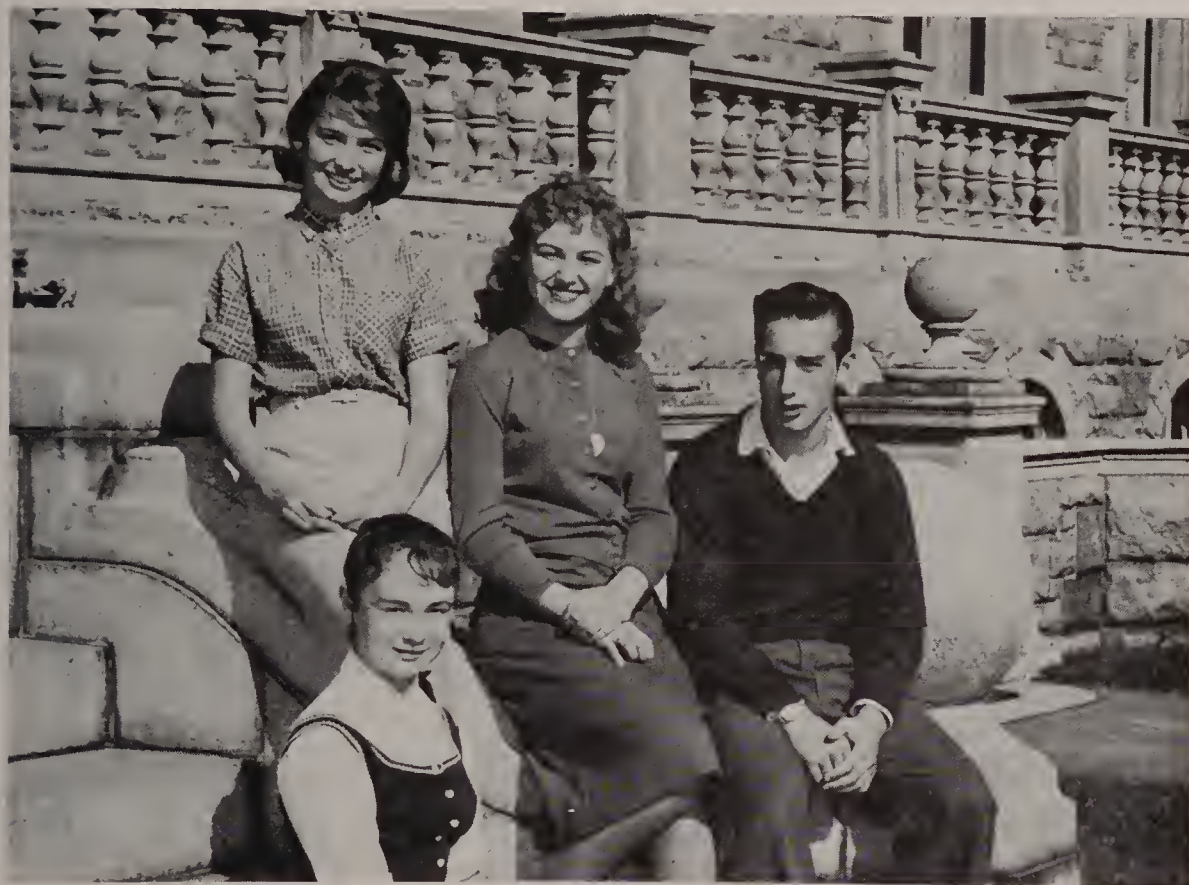

Thus it was that the class of '60 completed the first phase of its journey through life, overcoming mountainous obstacles and surpassing the deeds of the mighty foe. All this was done under the aegis of Athene, and to this day our class continues to progress within the fair walls of the high-roofed citadel over whose portals is inscribed "Ad astra."

Freshman Class Officers

Sandwiched in a busy year of classwork, homework, supporting our teams on the fields and participating in other Sophomore activities, our class of '61 found time to complete a few projects. Headed by our able class officers and student council members, we very successfully sold assorted candy bars as our main project. The profit made from this candy sale will go in our treasury to defray our graduating expenses. Along with the other classes we also participated in a school dance called the Football Bounce. We sent fruit baskets and books to a few of our class members who were either hospitalized or seriously ill.

Congratulations are in order for Geoffry Arnold, a Sophomore, having the highest average in her class, who was asked to give a short speech at the Honor Society Installation. Congratulations also to two Sophomore girls, Maureen Cunningham and Victoria Plezia, who were fortunate enough to be selected to play in the Greater Boston Youth Symphony.

Our class would like to thank Mr. Donald Dufour for his helpful and willing assistance in helping us carry out our class projects.

Nancy Moss—Vice-President

Victoria Plezia—Student Council

Freshman Class Activities

During a hectic year of reading the Odyssey, puzzling over linear equations and learning Latin declensions, the Freshman students took time out for fun and a class project. All one hundred sixty class members ambitiously set out to sell the everyday gift wrap, our chosen project. Later in the year the Freshmen joined with upperclasses to sponsor the popular Football Bounce dance.

In the field of sports several Freshmen distinguished themselves in football, basketball and track. Robin Holmes' winning a varsity letter in football made us justly proud of him as a member of our class.

Although it is rather early in our high school career to talk of honor and glory which has been achieved, we press on to the mark set before us by the members of each graduating class. As we near the end of this Freshman year, we look with great anticipation to our futures as Sophomores in F. H. S., ready to be instructed and eager to learn.

CURRICULUM

*Mere stone and brick and glass a school is not;
It is teachers, students, classes, books, and thought.*

The Educator

(Editor's note: The following poem, written by Jonathon Botelho, won a certificate from the National High School Poetry Association and has been published in the Anthology of High School Poetry.)

Teacher, to you do I entrust my son.
Now take his hand and lead him down the paths
Of knowledge following ways of truth and good;
For knowledge of itself has little use,
It is only good when used in good's employ.
Mold today's child into tomorrow's man;
Here is your building block — his intellect;
Upon this base you shall create a man.
And yet, forget this not — the future of
A child, a man, a world is in your hands.

SCIENCE

The dawn of the space age has hit the world with a tremendous impact. Science has become the key word in modern education. The science department of Fairhaven High School is striving to give students a practical knowledge of general science, biology, chemistry, and physics, as well as to prepare those who will continue their scientific studies at the college level.

Faculty

WALTER D. WOOD, A.B., M.A.

Mr. Wood serves as physics instructor as well as assistant principal at Fairhaven High School. A native of Worcester, Massachusetts, Mr. Wood attended Clark University and has been affiliated with Fairhaven High School for thirty years. He enjoys fresh water fishing, waltzing, and reading in his leisure hours and serves as treasurer of the Fairhaven Protecting Society, an organization which is associated with the Fairhaven Fire Department. Mr. Wood makes his course interesting as well as often amusing by punctuating his lessons with personal experiences pertinent to the discussion.

CARLTON C. ALBRITTON, B.S. in Ed.

Mr. Albritton, known for his soft southern drawl, cites his home town as Junction City, Arkansas. A teacher of biology and general science at Fairhaven High School, he is a graduate of Southern State College. Mr. Albritton is interested in fishing, hunting, and photography.

RAYMOND G. BOYCE, B.S. in Ed., Ed.M.

Our chemistry teacher, Mr. Boyce, is admired at Fairhaven High School for his unique taste in neck ties. A native of Swampscott, Massachusetts, he was educated at Fitchburg State Teachers' College and Bridgewater State Teachers' College. He began his teaching career at Fairhaven High School in 1946. His interests include geology as well as semi-classical and popular music, and he is an instructor of driver education. Mr. Boyce is also known as "Mr. Fixit", an epithet which speaks for itself.

HAROLD CORNFORTH, JR., A.B., M.Ed.

Mr. Cornforth, mathematics instructor and assistant coach, is also a teacher of general science.

EUGENE H. GOLDRICK, B.A.

Mr. Goldrick, mechanical drawing instructor at Fairhaven High School, also teaches general science.

MELVIN ENTIN, B.S.

Mr. Entin, head coach and boys' physical education instructor, also teaches biology.

The laws of chemistry are re-discovered in the F. H. S. chemistry lab.

General Science

The science program of Fairhaven High School may be compared to a three stage rocket. The launching platform of this rocket is general science, a course offered to Freshmen. At this launching platform, the students become acquainted with the various phases of science—biology, chemistry, astronomy, physics and climatology. Demonstrations and experiments performed by the instructor enhance the value of this course. After acquiring a background in each of these various fields of science, the student must decide whether or not he will be on board when this science rocket blasts off into more specialized scientific study.

Biology

The first stage of the rocket is biology. This is the science of living things, and the student becomes acquainted with all forms of life, from the microscopic amoeba to the most complex of all forms of life — man. With the help of two very capable and cooperative gentlemen, Joe Movable and Joe Bones, the students discover the marvels of the human body. Pupils finding themselves greatly interested in biology might consider careers in the field of medicine.

Betty Ann and Donna examine a human skull.

Chemistry

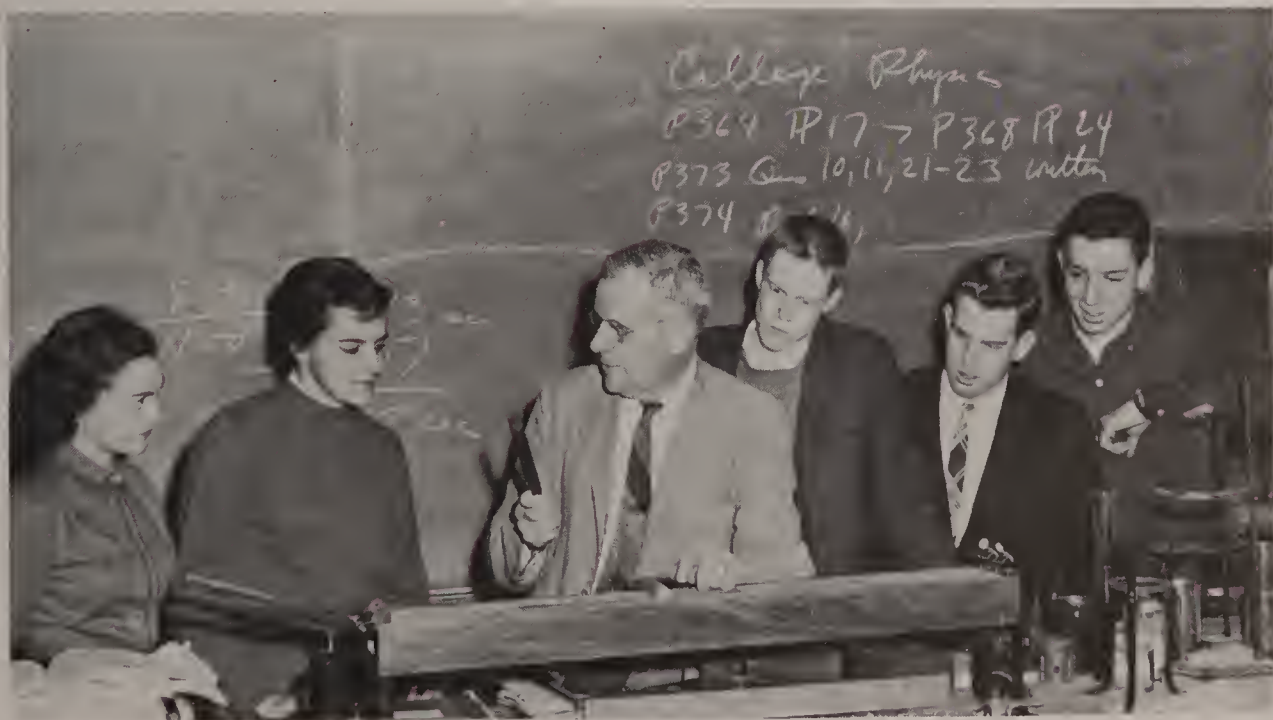

The first stage of the rocket has now fallen into the sea of memory, and we now focus our attention on the second stage — chemistry. In the mysterious world of test tubes and chemicals, the student learns about matter and the chemical changes in matter. This course includes laboratory experiments intended to supplement the textbook material. Although no new rocket fuel has yet been discovered by Fairhaven High School chemists, experiments such as testing the solubility of salts and destructively distilling coal have been performed with great success. Anyone considering a career in science would certainly benefit from this course.

Physics

Finally, the third stage of our rocket is left to explore the uppermost reaches of high school science — physics. This course, concerned with matter and energy and the physical changes in matter, would appeal to the future engineer. There are two divisions in the physics course — college physics and non-college physics. Both are fundamentally the same, except for the fact that the non-college physics course includes no mathematics. Both divisions use, in addition to the textbook, a laboratory manual containing eighty practical experiments designed to illustrate many of the basic principles of physics.

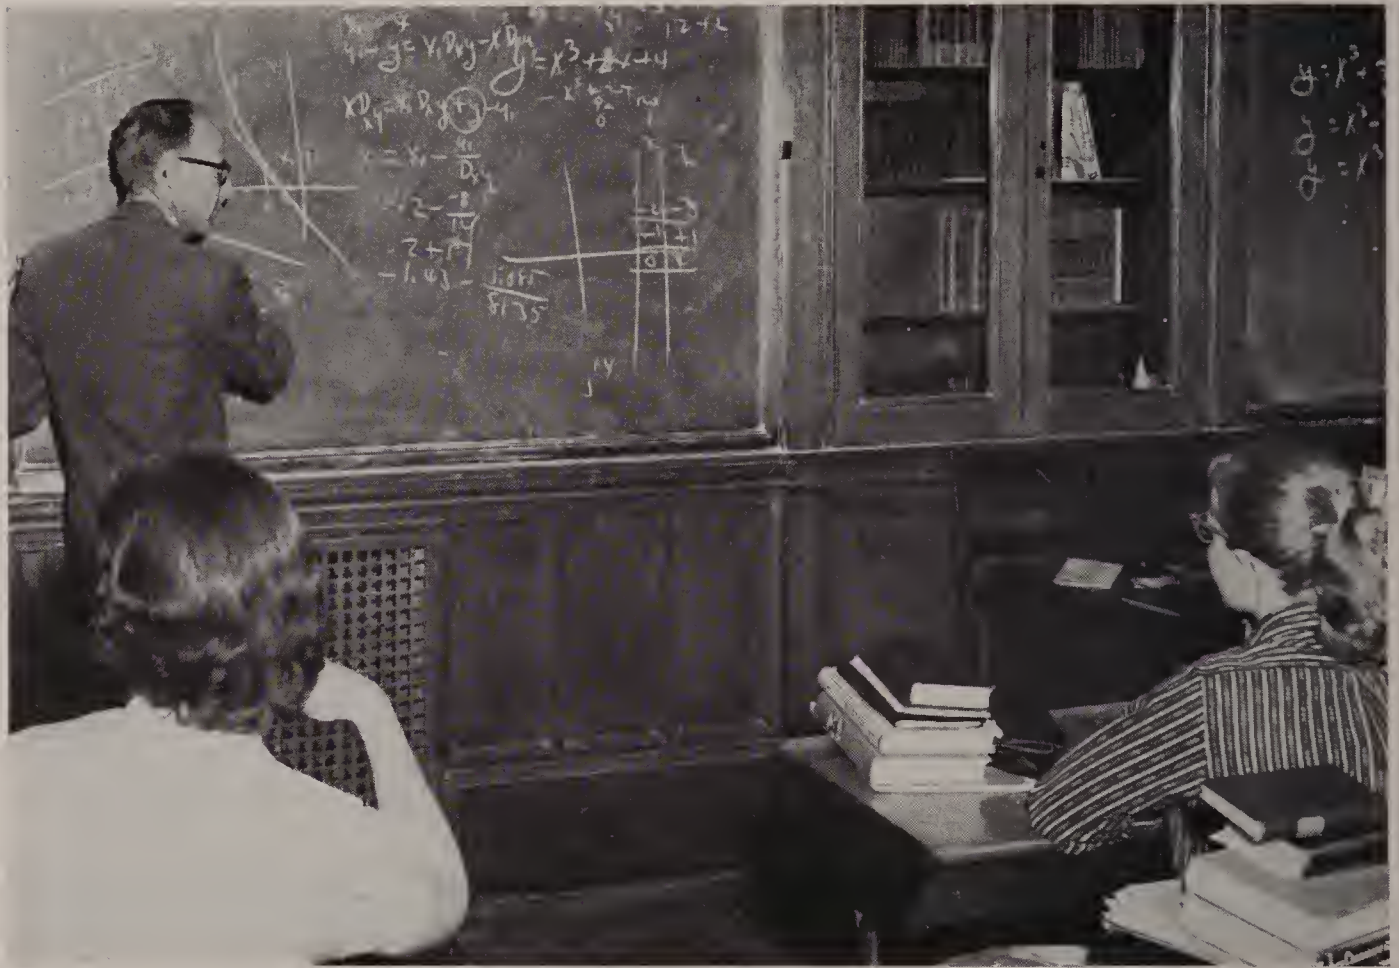

After a year's study of physics, our science rocket has at last reached its destination — a thorough and practical knowledge of high school science. The student who has taken advantage of the science courses at Fairhaven High School will be prepared to assume his place in a world where awareness of science is becoming increasingly important.

Mr. Wood uses the sonometer to demonstrate the laws of strings.

MATHEMATICS

Today the study of mathematics in our high schools is playing a greater role than ever before. One of the fundamental aims of the Fairhaven High School Mathematics Department is to supply the student with the means to fulfill his need to think rationally, to express his thoughts clearly, and to read and listen with understanding.

Faculty

ROBERT C. LAWTON, B.M.E., Ed.M.

Mr. Lawton, who has taught at the high school for thirty years, is head of the Mathematics Department. He was born in South Portland, Maine, and was graduated from Northeastern University and Boston University. Mr. Lawton enjoys reading non-fiction, listening to classical music, and, as his students have observed, watching Channel 2. He also serves as a Fairhaven town meeting member.

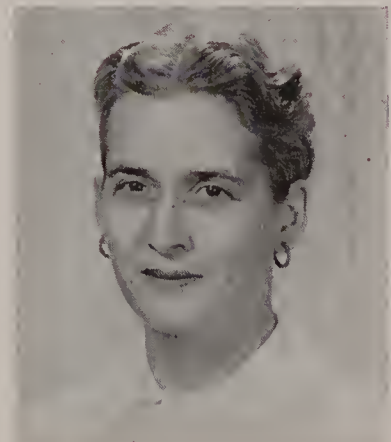

HAROLD CORNFORTH, JR., A.B., M.Ed.

Mr. Cornforth serves in a variety of capacities at Fairhaven High School. He teaches both mathematics and general science and is a member of the coaching staff. A native of New Bedford, he is an alumnus of Bates College and Bridgewater State Teachers' College. An avid sports enthusiast, Mr. Cornforth particularly enjoys boating and swimming.

IONA J. KUNZ, B.S.

Mrs. Kunz, who comes from New York, is a graduate of Simmons College. A busy homemaker, she cites housework as her chief occupation outside of school. Mrs. Kunz has been teaching mathematics at Fairhaven High School for two years.

JOHN C. MALCOLM, B.S.

Almost any bright day, a person in the vicinity of a local boatyard might see Mr. Malcolm busily working on his sloop. A graduate of Fairhaven High School, he studied at the New Bedford Institute of Technology before returning here as a mathematics teacher.

The space age of tomorrow is going to require more education of each person, especially in the field of mathematics, in order to create in our citizens an intelligent understanding of daily events. A good mathematics program is, therefore, extremely important in the high schools of today.

A program of this nature naturally requires a good textbook. Mr. Lawton found such a text in the "Functional Mathematics" series. This series integrates arithmetic, algebra, geometry, trigonometry, and the elements of analytical geometry and calculus in such a way that each one helps to explain the other. Thus, this integration breaks down the artificial barrier that previously existed among the various branches of mathematics.

Another important feature of this program is the greater emphasis that it places on analytics, a branch of mathematics which is gaining ever-increasing importance in the high schools of today. An example of this is the use of algebra for the derivation of geometric proofs.

In addition to this program, the freshmen taking college mathematics are using the first volume of a new series of integrated textbooks. This series places greater emphasis on such branches of mathematics as statistics, a subject which has only recently been recognized as a vital part of a mathematics education. Thus the Fairhaven High School Mathematics Department is keeping up with modern developments in this field in order to give the student the best possible course in high school mathematics.

FOREIGN LANGUAGES

In addition to the added emphasis on the sciences in modern education, there is a great upsurge in the study of foreign languages. The advantages of a sound training in languages are innumerable. We, at Fairhaven High School, are fortunate in having an excellent department, which offers instruction in both classical and modern languages.

Faculty

EDITH G. DIAS, A.B.

Latin may be a dead language in some places, but not at Fairhaven High School. Mrs. Dias, who has taught here since 1933, brightens up her class with her glowing smile and lucid teaching. A native of Fairhaven, Mrs. Dias was graduated from Pembroke College in Brown University. She has long been a devotee of tennis and now enjoys reading and traveling.

PHILLIPS A. NOYES, A.B., Ed.M.

Senor (or, Monsieur) Noyes is the head of the Modern Language Department at Fairhaven High. Although he was born in Kittery, Maine, he spent his early youth in West Sumerville, Massachusetts. He has extensive linguistic training, having graduated from Dartmouth College, L'Universite de Grenoble, and Harvard University. In addition, Mr. Noyes has done graduate work at Columbia University. This is his tenth year at Fairhaven High School. Un homme tres athletique and un profesor muy agradabile. Mr. Noyes enjoys tennis and swimming. He spends much of his time in home maintenance projects and is also an amateur banjoist.

DONALD J. DUFOUR, A.B., Ed.M.

M. Dufour, Monsieur le professeur du francais et la geographie, was graduated from Assumption College, Worcester, and Bridgewater State Teachers' College. He is interested in foreign languages and speaks several including Chinese; he also likes to play tennis, both the indoor and the outdoor varieties.

Classics

The four-year program in Latin offered at Fairhaven High School is a well-rounded one. Since Latin is no longer spoken in its original form — although variants of the language are alive today as Italian, French, Spanish, Portuguese, and Rumanian — the emphasis in class is on written translating and reading. The importance of classical training in high school cannot be over-emphasized. It helps to increase one's English vocabulary, since almost fifty percent of the words in English have Latin roots. It prepares one for further study in foreign languages. By use of case in nouns, Latin makes one more keenly aware of a word's use in a sentence, improves grammar, and encourages pride in creating a well-written English sentence. Finally, the study of Latin affords an opportunity for appreciation of Roman culture and literature, since works by Caesar, Cicero, and Vergil are read. For these reasons, Latin should be the sine qua non of a modern education.

Studia Classica

Curriculum per quattuor annos linguae Latinae in schola superiore nostra oblatum est plenum. Cum lingua Latina in sua prima forma non jam dicatur — cum varietates linguae Romanae hodie vivant, i. e. lingua Italiae, lingua Gallica, lingua Hispaniae, lingua Lusitaniae et lingua Rumaniae — emphasis in cursu in translationibus scriptis et legendo ponitur. Significatio disciplinae classicae in schola superiore exaggerari non potest. Discipulus indicem verborum amplificare potest, cum prope quinquaginta per centum verborum linguae Anglicae radices linguae Latinae teneant. Item haec lingua ad studium linguarum alienarum discipulum parat. Usu casus nominum lingua Latina ei monstrat usum verbi in sententia, grammaticam proficit, et hortatur superbiam sententia Anglica recte scripta. Denique studium linguae Latinae opportunitatem aestimandi cultum et literaturam Romae dat, cum opera C. Julii Caesaris, M. Tullii Ciceronis, et P. Vergilii Maronis legantur. Quas ob causas, lingua Latina sine qua non disciplinae hodie esse debet.

Modern Languages

The languages of Spain, Spanish America, and France are vigorously taught at Fairhaven High School. Three years of French are offered. It is regrettable, however, that only two year's training in Spanish is given at this time due to a crowded schedule. In view of the increasing need for trained linguists, the emphasis today is on speaking foreign languages. For this purpose, the Spanish-speaking organization, El Club Espanol, and its French counterpart, Le Cercle Francais, have been established. It is hoped that this dual program will aid the understanding and appreciation of our foreign neighbors, and their culture.

La clase de español es agradable.

Las Lenguas Modernas

El departamento de lenguas modernas de la escuela superior de Fairhaven es extremadamente afortunado en tener dos profesores distinguidos — Phillips A. Noyes, el director, y Donald J. Dufour.

El departamento ofrece tres años de francés, pero nosotros sentimos decir que por un programa de estudios muy repleto, solamente dos años de español son a la disposición de los estudiantes.

Recientemente, ha habido una tendencia entre los educadores de los Estados Unidos de poner un mayor énfasis en el hablar de una lengua extranjera en lugar de la gramática. El señor Noyes no conviene completamente en esta idea, porque una comprensión extensiva de la gramática es necesaria para bien comprender y usar una lengua.

Además, para proporcionar una instrucción igual, una asociación de habla española, El Club Español, y una organización paralela de habla francesa, "Le Cercle Français," se han establecidas.

Se espera que este programa dual ayude la comprensión y la apreciación de nuestros vecinos extranjeros y de su cultura.

M. Noyes corrige le travail de ses élèves.

Les Langues Modernes

Le département des langues modernes de l'école supérieure de Fairhaven est extrêmement fortuné d'avoir deux professeurs distingués — Phillips A. Noyes, le directeur, et Donald J. Dufour.

Le département offre trois ans de français, mais nous regrettons de dire qu'à cause d'un plan d'études rempli, il n'y a que deux ans d'espagnol à la disposition des étudiants.

Dernièrement, il y a eu une tendance entre les éducateurs des États-Unis de mettre un plus grand accent sur la langue étrangère parlée au lieu de la grammaire. Monsieur Noyes n'est pas tout à fait d'accord avec cette idée, puisqu'une connaissance étendue de la grammaire est nécessaire pour bien connaître et employer une langue.

ependant, pour fournir une instruction bien égale, une association espagnole, "El Club Español," et une organisation pareille, Le Cercle Français, se sont établies.

On espère que ce programme duelle aidera l'entendement et l'appréciation de nos voisins étrangers et de leur culture.

ENGLISH

Since every student at Fairhaven High School is required to take four years of English, it is obvious that the English department is indispensable. This department is modern and progressive, offering not only training in grammar and literature, but also public speaking and remedial reading. In addition, the senior English classes are divided into several groups, some of them being accelerated classes in keeping with the demands of contemporary educators. Therefore, our English department, under the capable leadership of Mrs. Paul Knipe, has gained great strides in the furthering of intellectual capabilities of the students.

Faculty

MABEL H. KNIPE, A.B., M.A.

Mrs. Knipe, head of the English department, has been teaching at Fairhaven High School for twenty-seven years. Born in Manchester, England, she was educated at Tufts University and Boston University, and is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, a national honorary fraternity. Her hobbies include reading, gardening, and singing. Students will always remember Mrs. Knipe and her English classes, which are consistently interesting and thought-provoking. Students will also recall the stimulating discussions which often occur in her classes.

MARGUERITE D. BRASOR, Ph.B.

A native of St. Albans, Vermont, Mrs. Brasor teaches Civics and English at Fairhaven High School. She graduated from the University of Vermont, and now possesses the dual role of teacher and homemaker, with housework as her chief extra-curricular interest.

PRISCILLA P. HILLER

The editorial staff of the Huttlestonian has a deep appreciation for the assistance Mrs. Hiller has given, while serving in the capacity of adviser to the yearbook. In addition to her advisory work, Mrs. Hiller is a member of the English department. Previously, she attended Nasson College. Among her interests are sailing, gardening, and archeology.

Faculty

MARGARET C. HOWLAND, A.B.

Mrs. Howland, who teaches English, attended Wheaton College. She lists her interests as, "My home and daughter, my pupils (bless them), music, theater, and good books, especially historical novels." "Hobbies"? she says. "My hobbies are teaching, running a home, lending a guiding hand, and a sympathetic ear to a teen-age daughter! Who has time for hobbies"?

MARY S. MATTFIELD, B.S.

A new course called Remedial Reading was created at Fairhaven High School this year. Many students who wished to improve their speed and comprehension benefited greatly from the instruction of Mrs. Mattfield, the Remedial Reading teacher. A graduate of Wellesley College and Boston University, the major interests of Mrs. Mattfield are reading and camping. She names Natick, Mass. as her hometown.

EDITH M. MOORE, A.B.

Mrs. Moore instructs pupils in the use of the English language. A graduate of Wheaton College, she is "interested in everything," especially horses and people. A participant in Civic Affairs, the school system in particular, Mrs. Moore served as a member and chairman of the Fairhaven School Committee for several years.

GEORGE F. ROGERS, A.B. in Ed.

Mr. Rogers comes from New Bedford, Mass. He graduated from Providence College, and has taught at Fairhaven High School for one year. His subjects of instruction include freshmen and sophomore English, and freshmen Jr. business training. Mr. Rogers is extremely interested in sports. He is secretary-treasurer of the Hathaway Athletic Club, secretary-treasurer of the Southeastern Mass. Semi-Pro League, Business Manager of the Hathaway A. C. Basketball team, and co-chairman of the 1959 Southeastern New England Golden Gloves Tourney.

*"Read Homer once, and you can read no more,
For all books else appear so mean, so poor, . . ."*
— John Sheffield.

Frank listens intently to Mrs. Howland's discourse.

The Freshman year commenced with the study of Homer's famous epic poem "The Odyssey." It was in the study of this great Homeric narrative, that students acquired a glimpse of Greek mythology. Other challenging books read included "Ivanhoe," "Sohrab and Rustum," and "The Ancient Mariner." Our second venture into the world of Shakespeare occurred when we studied "The Merchant of Venice." This year we acquired a more comprehensive view of grammar and learned to write more mature compositions.

"There is one God that is Lord over the earth, and one Captain that is lord over the PEQUOD — On deck!"

The careful examination of Captain Ahab increased our knowledge of the sea and our philosophical insight. A tender adolescent story, "The Yearling," captured our sympathies. We also selected books other than those chosen by our teachers for outside reading and oral book reports. A new phase of English was introduced when we studied Word Wealth Part One. Our greatest attempt at creative writing to this date was a short story, written after a thorough study of the short story. We began our first step in the field of literature, when we undertook a comprehensive study of American Literature. Our yearly Shakespearean study consisted of either "Julius Caesar" or "Twelfth Night." After reviewing our grammar rules, we concluded the year by taking our first final examinations.

Mr. Dias leads a discussion on "A Tale of Two Cities".

"It's a far far better thing I do now, than I have ever done before."

Much more was accomplished in our Junior year than in previous years. Our most extensive projects were reading "A Tale of Two Cities," preparing research for a thousand word theme, and supplementing our knowledge of English Literature with English history. Along with three extra books a term, we read "Idylls of the King," and "Silas Marner." We also continued our study of Word Wealth, and therefore added many new words to our vocabulary. Our Junior year terminated with a list of troublesome spelling words and final examinations.

"To be, or not to be, that is the question."

These students are taking advantage of the new course in remedial reading.

"Hamlet" and the memory selections from this great play involved a large amount of our time. We wrote many college-level compositions in connection with this study. We also enjoyed many stimulation discussions on "The Forsyte Saga," "Prestor John," "Romeo and Juliet," "Scaramouche," "Cyrano de Bergerac," and "The Citadel" completed the list of required reading for the Senior year. We wrote comparative papers on "Elizabeth the Queen" and "The Barrets of Wimpole Street." Our vocabulary building was concluded with Part Three of Word Wealth. Two research papers provided much outside study and writing; one a two thousand word theme concerning a subject of our own choice, and the other a biography taken from our World Literature charts. Much reading was accomplished in connection with our World Literature. Another spelling list was added to our toils.

It is obvious that we have completed four years of hard work with rewarding results.

HISTORY

History — the evolution of man — a narrative of events — the past. Yesterday history was made. Today history is being made. Tomorrow history will be made. By studying this subject we not only acquire essential knowledge of previous occurrences but also learn to analyze current events and gain an important insight into the future. The History Department of Fairhaven High School is striving to educate the student in the history of our world, to make him more aware of his American heritage, and to prepare him to be a better citizen.

Faculty

MRS. MARGUERITE D. BRASOR

Mrs. Brasor teaches history as well as being a member of the English Department at Fairhaven High School.

ALEXANDER M. CLEMENT

Mr. Clement, who teaches U. S. History, came to Fairhaven High School twenty years ago. Born in Chicopee, Massachusetts, he attended Williams College, North Adams State Teachers' College, and Hyannis State Teachers' College. He enjoys athletics of all types and likes to solve crossword puzzles. Mr. Clement also devotes much of his time to Little League baseball.

MANUEL FONTES, B.S., B.A., M. in Ed.

Mr. Fontes, an alumnus of Boston College and Bridgewater State Teachers' College, is from New Bedford. Fishing is his favorite form of recreation. A teacher of history and government, Mr. Fontes was a new addition to the faculty this year.

RICHARD GAMBLE, B.A.

Mr. Gamble, a teacher of U. S. History, Problems of Democracy, and Economics, cites international affairs as one of his many interests. He also enjoys music, theater, and sports. A native of New Bedford, Mr. Gamble is a graduate of the University of Massachusetts.

Our panoramic view of the History Department commences when our glance rests on the Stone Age, which was the beginning of man, as well as the beginning of ancient history. This is a fascinating subject which explores society from the primitive existence of man to the highly civilized state of Greek civilization and finally concludes with the vastness and magnificence of the Roman Empire. With the fall of this great empire goes also the fall of classical civilization, the temporary fall of culture, and the climax of ancient history. Before turning our glance from this brilliant vista of history, we realize that we have glimpsed not only the splendor of Greece and Rome, but also the awe-inspiring pharaohs of Egypt, the wonders of the Stone Age, and the legendary hanging gardens of Babylon.

We are next attracted by the beauty of the Renaissance, the re-birth of culture, an important view in the wide scope of world history. We study the governments of the world from anarchy to democracy and the relationships existing between nations. The feudal system has begun to dissolve, while the teaching of Christianity progresses throughout the world. The colorful region of the Popes, the pageantry of the Crusades, and the Protestant Reformation occupy much of our attention.

Subsequently we observe with familiarity the simple beginnings of our American heritage, as we begin our study of United States History. From the small gatherings of Pilgrims to our modern, prosperous, and democratic society we are inspired by the constant struggle of man for freedom and equality. We never tire of hearing the stories of Abraham Lincoln, the Civil War, and the American Revolution.

Soon our eyes travel to the complexities of our economic system. In our study of economics, we are introduced to such topics as the farm situation, labor unions, American monetary problems, and business cycles.

We are almost blinded by the many humanitarian efforts of Americans to improve society that we encounter in Problems of Democracy. Here we are stunned by numerous social problems such as juvenile delinquency, labor disputes, crime, and housing. We soon learn that our democratic way of life is not without imperfections, but we also learn that it is the best form of government yet devised by man.

Thus we have completed our view of the wide panorama known as the Past. Through our study of history we have gained a deeper appreciation of our world and its peoples.

BUSINESS

The Business Course at Fairhaven High is planned to prepare students for further business education or for immediate work in business after graduation. This course offers typing, bookkeeping, stenography, business law, and Office Practice, which includes a study of business machines, filing, and payroll procedures. Also, students enrolled in this course have an opportunity to study such subjects as science, biology, French, Spanish, history, and geography.

Faculty

MRS. NOYER, B.S. in Ed.

The head of the business department is Mrs. Noyer, who received her education at Salem State Teachers' College. She has taught office practice for the past thirty years. This year, she is also teaching business law, a new addition to the Business curriculum. Mrs. Noyer's hobbies include knitting, reading, studying, and gourmet cooking.

MRS. OLIVEIRA, B.S., Ed.M.

Typewriting is now being taught by Mrs. Oliveira, a former student of Fairhaven High. She graduated from both Katharine Gibbs School and from Salem State Teachers' College. Reading and cooking are among her interests.

MR. OLIVER, B.S., Ed.M.

Mr. Oliveira, a graduate from Boston University, also teaches in the Business Course. He is the bookkeeping instructor this year. He enjoys skating, reading, and photography.

MRS. ROBINSON, B.S. in Ed.

Mrs. Robinson attended Salem State Teachers' College, and now is the stenography teacher at Fairhaven High. In previous years she has taught junior business. She is especially interested in church work and furniture refinishing.

"I saw that he was vexed by my puns about the wax jobs on the oily cabs."

During the Freshman year, only one business subject can be taken. This is junior business, which is designed to give students a background on general business procedures, in order to prepare them for their future business subjects.

Bookkeeping and typing are added to the business curriculum in the sophomore year. Since both of these subjects are very important, they are also studied in the junior year along with stenography.

In the first year of stenography, the general fundamentals are studied and practiced. Then, in the senior year, students are given an opportunity to use their skill in transcription classes. Besides stenography, office practice and business law are also taken in the senior year.

In office practice, students learn filing and payroll procedures, and are given an opportunity to familiarize themselves with different types of computing machines and also the IBM electric typewriter.

Business law is a new addition to the Business Course this year. In business law students learn in detail our court system and are given an understanding of all the important phases of law concerning business, such as contracts, insurance and real estate.

Upon finishing this course, students have a knowledge of typewriting, bookkeeping, stenography, filing, business law, business machines, and other important subjects; and, immediately after graduation, students are prepared to take their place in the business world.

HOME ECONOMICS

Every girl should have at least a basic knowledge of the fundamental duties of the homemaker, such as cooking, sewing, and home arrangement. The Home Economics Department provides an opportunity for the girls of the high school to learn these fundamentals.

Faculty

JEANNETTE MULVEY

Mrs. Mulvey, a native of Fairhaven, attended Bridgewater State Teachers' College. Our foods teacher, she has been a member of the Fairhaven High School faculty for seven years. Mrs. Mulvey is a member of the Foods and Nutrition Associates of Southern Massachusetts and is a lay associate of the Holy Cross Fathers.

BEATRICE M. SPENCE, B.A., M.A.

Mrs. Spence, who attended Middlebury College, Columbia University, and Cornell University, is a resident of Fairhaven. A member of the faculty for six years, she teaches home economics and freshman forum. Mrs. Spence is also adviser for the Sewing Club. In her leisure hours she enjoys gardening, reading, and knitting.

This class of future homemakers is studying home planning.

Fashions are created by F. H. S. seamstresses

In its efforts to teach the fundamentals of homemaking to its pupils, the Home Economics Department offers various courses. To begin her training in homemaking, the freshman girl is introduced to foods. Foods is a required half year course for all freshman girls. The course teaches its students basic recipes, the use of proper kitchen tools, the proper way of performing kitchen duties, and table setting. Along with foods, the freshman girl is required to take home economics I. This course also is for a half year. Home economics I acquaints the young teen-ager with the problems, life, and interests of her era. The course also tries to show the girls how to get along with their classmates, teachers, and acquaintances.

The next step in teaching homemaking is home economics II. Available to sophomore and junior girls during one half year, the girls study the management of time, energy, and finances; during the second half year, the growth and development of a child is studied.

Finally, there is home economics III. This course is open to senior girls only. It consists of the study of family life and relationship, for one half year, and the planning and furnishing of a "dream house", for the other half year.

Aside from the homemaking courses, the Home Economics Department attempted a course for boys known as freshman forum. Freshman forum is an innovation to the freshman curriculum. It is a course designed to acquaint the freshman boys with the situations and changes met upon entering high school. Plans for after high school are also discussed.

MANUAL ARTS

For boys interested in developing manual skills, Fairhaven High School offers training in various areas of woodworking, metal working, printing, and drafting. The student selecting these courses not only acquires a basic training in manual arts, but also gains some marketable skills.

Faculty

EUGENE H. GOLDRICK, B.A.

A graduate of Providence College, Mr. Goldrick has also attended the New Bedford Institute of Technology, Boston University, and Bridgewater State Teachers' College. He teaches both mechanical drawing and general science at Fairhaven High School and in his spare time does a great deal of reading.

WILLIAM R. GURNETT, B.S. in Ed.

Mr. Gurnett, an alumnus of State Teachers' College, Fitchburg, is a native of Fall River, Massachusetts. A teacher of Shop and printing, Mr. Gurnett enjoys playing his hi-fi set in his spare time.

Mechanical Drawing

Mr. Parkinson and Allan
discuss a drawing problem

The mechanical drawing course at Fairhaven High School is a four year elective program. It has, as an overall objective, several inter-related goals. These include the strengthening of constructive imagination, development of exactness of thought and power of visualization, familiarization with the language of industry, and training in the making of working drawings. Classes are carried on somewhat informally, with each student working independently. This system is necessary since classes often include a wide range of students from beginners to those taking their fourth year of mechanical drawing. Typical assignments are orthographic projections, sectioning, lettering, or gear construction.

Mr. Goldrick supervises senior students in mechanical drawing.

Shop

The first year of shop consists of building small projects with emphasis on joinery and the development of skill with hand tools.

The second course consists of gaining a useable knowledge of power tools and the building of a larger project.

The third course consists of designing and constructing an individual project.

The desk is nearly finished as Chris carefully sands it

Printing

The first year of printing consists of learning the basics of hand composition.

The second year consists of learning design and display composition, along with press work and paper cutting.

Advanced courses consist of experimentation in the field of Graphic Arts and the development of further skills in the field of printing.

PHYSICAL EDUCATION

In ancient Greece, education consisted of equal development of mind and body. Today, although we stress the development of the mind over the body, our high school provides an adequate course in physical education. In spite of crowded conditions, a variety of activities is offered to encourage the students of our high school to keep physically as well as mentally fit.

Faculty

ANNE F. HAYES, B.S.

A native of New Bedford, Miss Hayes was graduated from Bridgewater State Teachers' College. Sports being her greatest interest, she particularly enjoys skiing. Miss Hayes has been teaching girls' physical education here for six years.

MELVIN ENTIN

Mr. Entin serves Fairhaven High School in a dual capacity, as he is both the Director of Physical Education and a teacher of biology. Born in Fairhaven, he has taught here for nineteen years. He was graduated from the University of Rhode Island. In his spare time, Coach Entin enjoys boating, fishing, and gardening.

HAROLD CORNFORTH, JR., A.B., M.Ed.

In addition to being a teacher of mathematics and general science, Mr. Cornforth is a member of the Fairhaven High School coaching staff.

RICHARD NORMAN, B.S.

Coach Norman was born in Brockton, Massachusetts, and was graduated from the University of Massachusetts. He is Supervisor of Physical Education in Elementary Schools and is an assistant coach at the high school. When Mr. Norman isn't participating in sports, he enjoys music, his favorite instrument being the trombone.

Girls' Physical Education

From ancient times until only a few decades ago, a woman's place was in the home. Physical fitness was regarded as strictly for men. Today physical education has become as essential for girls as for boys.

A course in physical education at Fairhaven High School may include exercises, tennis, volleyball, basketball and softball. As you can see, sports are not restricted to the boys. The girls' gym course even includes apparatus work as well as square dancing.

Some of the objectives of girls' physical education are to create a sense of fair play and team work, to develop leadership and a desire for participation in group activities, and to promote adjustment to high school activities. Thus, this course develops each girl's character as well as her physical fitness.

Boys' Physical Education

The physical education program for boys helps each individual to develop strength and skill. It also assists the students in making quality judgments. Through this program, the boys enjoy new experiences which aid in their period of adjustment.

Loyalty to the team or the school and also good sportsmanship and a sense of fair play are emphasized as objectives of the boys' physical education course. Other very important qualities such as initiative, leadership, discipline, and self-control are developed.

These objectives are brought about by a varied course including both individual and team activities. The boys in this course play various sports as they are in season along with indoor track, athletic relays, and apparatus work. This year the boys were subjected to a physical fitness test, sponsored by the Junior Amateur Athletic Union of the United States as part of their training.

MUSIC AND ART

The ancient Greeks were aware of the great importance of music and art. Nevertheless, for many years cultural beauty was lost to the world. Today, however, the light of music and art again illuminates the world. Through excellent art and music departments, Fairhaven High School is striving to develop an appreciation for beauty among its students.

Faculty

LEO BALANDYK

Mr. Balandyk, who was born in New Bedford, attended the Contemporary School of Music in New York City. The Supervisor of Instrumental Music, he is also a private instructor and has taught such instruments as the clarinet, the saxophone, the oboe, the trumpet, and the horn. In his spare time, Mr. Balandyk enjoys listening to his fine collection of high fidelity recordings.

ELIZABETH MANDELL

Mrs. Mandell, who was born in Somerville, Massachusetts, teaches art at Fairhaven High School. A graduate of the School of the Museum of Fine Arts, she lists portrait painting as her favorite medium of art. She is also president of the New Bedford Art Group.

MARGUERITE JOHNSON

Mrs. Johnson, who was born in Acton, Maine, attended the New England Conservatory of Music. The Supervisor of Choral Music, she has been teaching in Fairhaven for fifteen years. Active in many professional and honorary organizations, Mrs. Johnson is the first vice-president of the new PSI Chapter of the Delta Kappa Gamma.

Band

The functions of the band were, as usual, extremely important to the success of the school year.

The band displayed their precision admirably at the football games and paraded their brass section advantageously during an occasional ear-splitting rally.

In February, four bandsmen participated in a regional concert at Mansfield, Massachusetts. Of these four musicians, three were chosen, after auditions, to partake in the All-State Convention, which this year was located in Hyannis, Massachusetts.

On its annual tag day, the largest fund raising campaign of the year, the band earned over six hundred dollars, even though it was hampered by strong winds and biting cold.

In March, the band presented its annual "Pops" Concert, which was highlighted by nostalgic reminiscences from the annals of popular dance music.

In April, the band played briefly at the dedication of a plaque to Joshua Slocum, the great author and adventurer. The band also traveled as a unit to Lincoln Park, where an immensely enjoyable evening was spent listening to the United States Navy Band.

The last of the band's functions was to march in the Memorial Day Parade, which it did with exceptional finesse.

As a fitting reward for a successful season, the band visited Boston for a day. This conclusion of the season was marked by a climatic "Pops" Concert at Symphony Hall.

One hundred twenty-six

Orchestra

Very few high schools in Massachusetts can boast of as well balanced an orchestra as that at Fairhaven High School. Under the direction of Mr. Leo Blandyk, the orchestra seeks to make its reputation even more well known than it is at present.

No less than twenty-three of its members were selected to participate in the Southeastern Massachusetts Concert, given this year in Mansfield. Of these twenty-three musicians, five were chosen, after meticulous auditioning to take part in All-State Orchestra, which was held in Hyannis.

Another great tribute to this fine orchestra is the fact that six of its members, after careful screening, have been chosen to play in an organization known as the Greater Boston Youth Symphony, which after much rehearsing, will present a number of concerts throughout the United States and will later tour Japan.

The basic functions of the Orchestra include playing at assemblies, the senior play, and graduation.

One hundred twenty-seven

Choral Music

The Choral Music Department, under the excellent direction of Mrs. Marguerite Johnson, is composed of several separate groups. There are the Choristers, the Junior-Senior Choir, the Freshman-Sophomore Chorus, the Girls' Glee Club, and the Double Quartet.

The Double Quartet, the most advanced of the groups, is also the most active. Six of its members participated in the Southeastern Massachusetts Concert at Mansfield, and, of this group, four students were selected to sing in the All-State Chorus, held in Hyannis. The Double Quartet has also sung at numerous social gatherings and has auditioned before judges at Dedham.

The event for which the four other groups rehearsed so diligently was the annual Choral Concert, which was held late in May. The season concluded in early June, when the group spent a day in Boston.

Art

The Art Department of Fairhaven High School is one of genuine value. Under the guidance of Mrs. Mandell, the year's art schedule is planned to achieve three goals. The promotion of sufficient interest in art so that the student will want to continue his work at home as a hobby or in later life as an occupation; the promotion of an appreciation in the student for the beauty in the world around him; and the promotion of creative ability in the student.

The year's art program is planned to contain a wide range of assignments in different media. The art student may delve into anything from pen and ink to oil paint, from water color to scratchboard, or even from the fine arts to the graphic arts.

It is easily seen that because of its organization and guidance, the Art Department of Fairhaven High School makes a real contribution to the school curriculum.

ADMINISTRATION

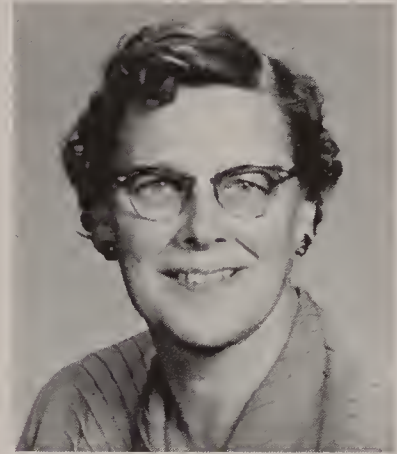

We gratefully dedicate this section to the Administration Staff which is comprised of the Guidance Director, the School Nurse, the Principal's Secretary, and the School Librarian. Their industry and guidance have constantly contributed to the welfare of the students and the success of the school.

Faculty

MRS. DORIS BRUCE, B.S. in Ed.

Mrs. Bruce, director of guidance and placement, is an important person at Fairhaven High School, for she helps mold the futures of our students. Educated at Bridgewater State Teachers' College and Boston University, Mrs. Bruce has been at the high school for fourteen years. She devotes her time to her home and family, various civic activities, camp work, and her work in advising students. Her hobbies include reading, cooking and "riding along country roads."

LOUISE F. DENNIE, R.N.

Mrs. Dennie, a resident of Mattapoisett, graduated from the Truesdale Hospital School of Nursing. She is the school nurse, and has been at Fairhaven High School for fifteen years.

MRS. EVELYN MARTIN

One of the best known people at Fairhaven High is Mrs. Martin, who has been secretary to the principal for sixteen years. She is a graduate of Fairhaven High School and attended Kinyon Secretarial School. Mrs. Martin enjoys sewing, cooking, and gardening.

AVIS M. PILLSBURY, PH.B.

Miss Pillsbury, Fairhaven High School librarian, attended Brown University and the University and the University of Illinois. Books, travel, and photography are among her interests. Her seasonal flower arrangements help to make our library a place of beauty as well as a place of study.

ACTIVITIES

*Since the stress on curriculum is particular,
The strain is relieved in the extra curricula.*

Huttlestonian

Once again the Huttlestonian staff got under way in their tiny crowded workroom up on the third floor of F. H. S. During a typical work period, everyone is busy with his journalistic assignment, the ancient typewriter may be heard hurriedly clacking away, and perhaps a flustered member of the art staff can be seen feverishly looking for the missing autograph page. Often on Tuesday afternoons, under the guidance of the "Huttlestonian" adviser, Mrs. Hiller, the staff gathers for an extra workshop hour in order to exchange ideas and to catch up on assignments.

The members of the business staff can often be found in the old auditorium Monday or Thursday afternoons, mulling over a week's advertising returns or discussing plans for another class advertising campaign. Although complaints about sore feet are often heard from these good natured staff members, they certainly have not hesitated to 'bring in those ads!'

Honor Society

Scholarship, leadership, character, and service are the four ideals that the members of the Fairhaven High School Chapter of the National Honor Society strive to uphold. The colors of the society are blue and flame-yellow, and its symbol is the flaming torch, which typifies light born into the dark places of the earth.

Every year, in January, after the second marking period closes, people who have succeeded in maintaining a high scholastic average, are selected from the Junior and Senior classes. They are initiated into the society in a very impressive ceremony conducted by the four officers. This years' officers are: president, Marilyn Wightman; vice-president, Gale Foster; secretary, Andrea Kucharsky; treasurer, Diana Zeiba.

The students in the society realize that responsibility goes along with high scholastic standing. Therefore, the members of this group are looked to not only for scholarship, but also outstanding leadership and service in school and in the community. Starting in 1958, this group has originated a scholarship fund. It is a small sum of money given to an outstanding member who has maintained a high rank in class, and also who has been of some outstanding service to the community. The money is raised through food sales and other projects.

It is evident that the National Honor Society of Fairhaven High is one of the strongest and certainly the most respected group in the school.

Key Club

This has been an outstanding year of achievement for the Fairhaven High School Key Club.

The club sponsored numerous programs, including a go-to-church campaign, a vocational guidance clinic, hallowe'en parties for children, a tea for the teachers, and a post-game football rally. They also raised several hundred dollars by selling Christmas trees and wreaths, as well as bars of soap, and by sponsoring a basketball game between the Alumni All-Stars and the 1951 state Championship team. In addition, the Key Club assisted the New Bedford Kiwanis Club during the United Fund campaign.

Contributions of the Key Club this year included a valuable dictionary for the library, starting blocks for the track team, and aid to needy families and mentally retarded children. A scholarship award will be presented from this organization at graduation.

Thus its many services to the school and the community make the Key Club one of our school's most valuable organizations.

Student Council

Foreign exchange students . . . teas . . . sales of book covers . . . dances . . . cake sales . . . Student Government Day . . . good relationships between students and faculty — all these things bring to mind the Student Council and the many worthwhile projects which it undertakes each year.

The Student Council, which is comprised of students representing each homeroom, has proved to be an unusually capable group this year with the assistance of Mrs. Doris Bruce and under the competent leadership of the president of the Student Council, Raymond Arruda; the vice-president, Andrea Kucharsky; and the secretary-treasurer, Elizabeth Radcliffe.

In addition to its usual projects, on March 13 the Student Council sponsored Student Government Day, when representatives of the student body of Fairhaven High School assumed the responsibilities of governing their town. The purpose of Student Government Day was to acquaint us with the mechanics of local government, and to enable us to see democracy in action.

Proposals for different plans which would benefit the school may also be presented before the Student Council by students. In this way, the Student Council serves both the students and the faculty and helps to promote good will in the school.

This organization, which is comprised of aspirants to the nursing profession, was established to familiarize its members with the various phases of their future career. The club, under the professional guidance of Mrs. Louise Dennie, R. N., has investigated not only the various schools of nursing and their requirements for entrance, but also the responsibilities of a student nurse.

The girls comprising the future nurses at the High School have visited area hospitals, paying their traveling expenses with funds they have raised themselves. A majority of the members serve as volunteers, two hours per week, at the nearby St. Luke's Hospital.

The meetings of the Future Nurses' Club take place once a month, and consist of interesting guest speakers and informative movies.

Traffic Squad

D. Johnson, M. Marques, E. Stening.
S. Rounsville, R. Arruda, Mr. Wood, B. Megathlin.

“Go around the monitor!” This familiar expression, heard between classes on the corridors of Fairhaven High School, is not a vocal exercise, but a necessary command of the members of the Traffic Squad to keep the congestion of students moving at a reasonable pace to its next class.

The Traffic Squad, which was organized at Fairhaven High School many, many years ago, has the specific duties of controlling traffic between classes, and allowing the faculty to prepare for the next class without the burden of acting as monitors.

Prospective monitors of the Traffic Squad submit an application near the end of the scholastic year to the Traffic Squad. If the applicant meets with the approval of the faculty adviser, Mr. Walter D. Wood and the Squad, he becomes a monitor with a responsibility to the school and to his schoolmates.

Each Traffic Squad officer, that is, the Senior and Junior Captains and the Senior and Junior Lieutenants, is responsible for a certain section of the school and the monitors in it. Thus the squad is an efficient unit, functioning smoothly throughout the high school.

Although there are no definite requirements in this activity, the girls have made several intricate and unique articles. Not only have these talented girls made dresses, slacks, blouses, and children's clothes, but also they have knitted argyle socks and stoles.

However, I'm sure that without the expert guidance of Mrs. Spence the dressmaking projects of the girls would not have been so successful.

Pep Squad

PEP SQUAD OFFICERS

P. Baron, G. Foster, L. Cadieux.

This year has been a year to be well remembered by the cheerleading squad. For the first time the cheerleaders were backed up by a fulltime Pep Squad.

The Pep Squad, under the able direction of Lynne Cadieux, president, Gale Foster, vice-president, and Pat Baron, secretary-treasurer, has made many advances. During football season the girls all wore blue sweat shirts and carried blue and white pom poms. When basketball season arrived, the squad bought heavy blue sweaters and wore black slacks with white shoes. The Pep Squad assisted the cheerleaders at football games, rallies, and during basketball season.

Besides enlarging the cheering section during football, the Pep Squad also marched with the band for the New Bedford Fairhaven game, providing color and spirit for a very important game.

They have certainly been peppy, spirited representatives of our school at all athletic competitions.

Library Assistants

If, when looking for a book, you find it easily because it is in its proper place; if you appreciate the decorations suited to a particular month or occasion in the library; if the book you borrow is covered or listed in the card catalogue; if you enjoy all these conveniences, you can feel grateful to the select group of eighteen to twenty girls known as library assistants, who are under the supervision of Miss Avis M. Pillsbury, the high school librarian.

At the beginning of the school year, the library assistants must familiarize themselves completely with the functions of a library. A manual of instructions containing a complete classification of the various types of books must be studied.

However, as a reward for these numerous and varied duties, the assistants receive two and a half credits toward having their names engraved on the Lady Fairhaven Cup. Having one's name engraved on the Lady Fairhaven Cup is an honor awarded to the graduating senior who has contributed the most in terms of service to the high school. Bearing this fact in mind, one can see that being a library assistant is not only a duty, but also a privilege.

The Girls' Athletic Association, capably led by Regina Damm, President, Eileen Machado, Vice President, and Patricia Souza, Secretary-Treasurer, has successfully financed the expenses of the girls' basketball, volleyball, and softball games this year. The remaining funds in their treasury will help pay for the annual banquet of the Girls' Bristol County League, held each spring.

In addition, the G. A. A. has aroused interest in girls' sports, and also urged participation in intramural activities after school. Their efforts have been greatly appreciated, especially by the members of the various girls' teams.

Cheerleaders

These "substitute" cheerleaders were never needed after their exhibition at the football rally.

E. Stening, M. Dumas, A. Kucharsky, D. Holden, T. Castelejo, J. Rose, E. Radcliffe.

Although people go to see athletic competitions to observe the teams involved, the cheerleaders are undoubtedly necessary. Can you imagine a game without spirit, a team without the support of its school, or a football season without a rally? The cheerleaders are the colorful, spirited portion of any athletic competition.

Our cheerleaders this year have fulfilled their duties more than adequately. All their uniforms are the products of a long struggle to earn money. They held a large cake sale in the beginning of the year, sold pom poms during football season, and participated in putting on a dance for Greater New Bedford. These projects were all extremely successful and resulted in two sets of new uniforms.

A cheerleader must be peppy vivacious, and spirited. Each member of the squad is a representative of several hundred students. As such, she must have personality, be a good sport, and have faith in her team regardless if they win or lose.

Cheerleading squads also participate in their own tournaments. The competition is keen and the results are gratifying. Our cheerleaders participate in the David Prouty Cheerleaders' Tournament. In the last two years, they have placed second and fourth, consecutively. This year the F. H. S. cheering squad earned the distinction of winning first place in this tournament.

M. Wightman, vice-president; M. Veilleux, recording secretary; A. Norlander, president; M. Gardner, corresponding secretary; T. Renahan, treasurer.
W. Carruth, L. Durfee, S. Pelson, C. Eldridge, R. Damm, J. Wotton, H. Johannsen, E. Carl, D. Pierce, M. Carvalho, J. Stonehill, N. Motta, L. Knight, L. Cadieux, N. Walker.

LE CERCLE FRANÇAIS

After two years of inactivity, Le Cercle Français has been revived under the capable guidance of Mr. Phillips A. Noyes of the Foreign Languages Department. To the students with two years' experience in French, the club offers an opportunity to speak the language, since all discussions are conducted entirely in French. This year Le Cercle Français will award a $15 prize to the Senior judged most facile in the use of French.

Officers for 1958-1959 are:

Présidente:.....Alberta Norlander
Vice-présidente:.....Marilyn Wightman
Secrétaire:.....Michelle Veilleux
Trésorier:.....Thomas Renahan

Après deux ans d'inaction, Le Cercle Français a été renouvelé sous la direction capable de M. Phillips A. Noyes du département des langues étrangères. Pour les étudiants qui ont déjà étudié le français pendant deux ans, le club donne l'opportunité de parler la langue, puisque toutes les discussions se conduisent entièrement en français. Cette année-ci le club offrira un prix de quinze dollars à l'étudiant de la quatrième année qui a montré le progrès le plus grand dans l'emploi du français.

Spanish Club

N. Oliveira, secretary; T. Renahan, vice-president; J. Botelho, president; N. Pinheiro, treasurer.
R. Arruda, N. Motta, P. Martin, L. Samaska, L. Durfee, I. Wesoly, U. Fernandes, A. Talbot.

EL CLUB ESPANOL

El Club Español, Fairhaven High School's Spanish-speaking organization, has had an interesting and enjoyable year. Since the purpose of the club is to encourage facility in the spoken language, meetings are conducted entirely in Spanish. Members read the newspaper for high school students "La Luz". This year El Club Español will award the "Phillips A. Noyes Prize for Excellence in Spanish" to the Senior who displays the greatest proficiency in the Spanish language.

Officers for 1958-1959 are:

Presidente:.....Jonathan A. Botelho
Vice-presidente:.....Thomas Renahan
Secretaria:.....Nesta Oliveira
Tesorera:.....Nancy A. Pinheiro

El Club Español, la organización de habla español de la escuela superior de Fairhaven ha pasado un año agradable e interesante. Puesto que el objeto del club es alentar la facilidad en la lengua hablada, las sesiones se conducen completamente en español. Los miembros leen el periódico escolar, "La Luz." Este año El Club Español dará el "Phillips A. Noyes Prize for Excellence in Spanish" al estudiante del cuarto año que exhibe la habilidad más notable en la lengua española.

ATHLETICS

*Just as our honor students bring us fame,
So do our teams make great our high school's name.*

Football Team

Head Coach Entin, J. Cabral, O. Blanchette, T. Perry, F. Freitas, R. Holt, W. Augustine, W. Portas, E. Smith, Assistant Coach Pallatroni.
 Assistant Coach Cornforth, L. Hirst, W. Cabral, S. Rounsville, R. Roderick, R. Correia, D. Langevin, J. Canto, R. Lebeau, P. Bernard, Assistant Coach Norman.
 J. Dobson, L. Fourcher, T. Mendell, D. Pimental, W. Cabral, A. Rego, E. Lobo, H. Knutsen, R. Beaulieu.
 C. Fermino, R. La Fleur, R. Litchfield, R. Duarte, R. Perry, W. Smith, R. Day, S. Toland.
 N. Holmes, E. Sylvia, L. Lauzon, J. Jackson, W. Perry, A. Raphael, D. Beaulieu, T. Richards, Manager.

Fairhaven High School's 1958 football team was a moderately successful one, when the almost complete renovation of the team is taken into consideration. Of the regular performers in 1957, only four remained to grace the confines of Fairhaven's beautifully muddy stadium.

The ranks of the coaching staff also changed appreciably from the year before, as Coaches Cornforth and Norman made their respective debuts on the football scene.

The outlook for 1959 is encouraging, as an experienced front wall will probably improve the club considerably.

Tom Mendell was absent when the picture was taken.

The won-lost record of Fairhaven's 1959 Basketball Team was as poor as Fairhaven has ever had.

To an outsider, it appeared that the team lacked only one thing — height. In this all-important department, the team was woefully weak.

What the boys lacked in height, however, they attempted to replace with tremendous determination. Their grit, stamina, and all-around hustle almost brought about amazing upsets on more than one occasion.

R. Arruda, S. Rounsville, J. Razon, A. Dellecese, J. Cabral, A. Martin.

Fairhaven High School's 1958 baseball team suffered through one of its worst seasons in many years. Despite the excellent coaching of Alec Clement, the squad was far from outstanding and could manage only two victories, while losing thirteen games. However, credit should go to Mr. Clement in his final season as coach, as he did as well as possible with the limited material available.

Due to the experience gained by last year's lettermen, as well as the addition of a few new capable players, the 1959 team promises to be much more successful than its predecessor. This team will be led by Coach Dick Norman, and it is our hope that the 1959 squad will compile a record more indicative of Fairhaven High School.

 R. Goodwin, R. Fontineaux, S. Rounselle, R. Hobson, S. Wacławik, T. Renahan, R.
 Arruda, J. Dupuis.

Coach Don Gavin and his squad once again came through with a successful season, winning four meets while losing three. Two of these defeats were by the narrow margins of $4\frac{1}{3}$ points and $1\frac{2}{3}$ points.

In addition to the regularly scheduled meets, some of the team members participated in the Bristol County championship competition at Sargent Field, as well as the state championships at White Stadium in Boston. In the state contest, Captain Paul Goulet won the State Class D shot put title, one of many highlights in his remarkable track career. Sprint star Sherm Rounselle also scored in the state meet, placing fourth in the 440 yard run.

Much of the credit for the success of the team belongs to Mr. Gavin, who, in his final year as track coach, combined a program of diligent practice with effective strategy while infusing his players with a strong winning spirit.

The 1959 squad will be a well-balanced one, with several returning lettermen as well as some outstanding newcomers providing Coach Hal Cornforth with an opportunity to make his first season at the helm a successful one.

Tennis Team

J. Bresnahan, M. Campbell, T. Mendell.
Coach Twarog, P. Fletcher, B. Behn, J. Carruth.

Fairhaven High School's tennis team showed a remarkable improvement in 1958. Coach Ed Twarog's terrors compiled an enviable 6-3 record for their best season in some time.

It is very encouraging to note that with one exception, Barry Behn, the team consisted entirely of sophomores — 1959 captain Frank Fletcher, Tom Mendell, John Bresnahan, Jim Carruth, and Mac Campbell. When one considers that these five have two years of eligibility remaining, it is not at all difficult to be optimistic about 1959 and 1960. Fairhaven might have one of the finest teams in its history.

S. Tunstall, S. Jacobson, R. Damm, E. Machado, J. Rose, E. Mahoney, L. Long, Miss Hayes.

The 1958 softball team had a very successful season, as the girls were victorious in the majority of their games. Ably coached by Miss Anne Hayes, the team boasted such veteran players as Jackie Rose, Linda Long, Sheila Tunstall, Carol Rego, Regina Damm, and Ellen Mahoney. Our hats are off to this deserving team which, through long hours of practice and the all-out efforts of every girl, met with success.

Best of luck in the coming season to the 1959 girls' softball team.

The girls' basketball team, under the direction of Miss Hayes, enjoyed one of its most rewarding seasons this year.

Even though the girls lost the majority of their games, they discovered that good sportsmanship and clean playing are far more important than winning.

The outstanding players on the team were: Forwards, Regina Damm (capt.), Harriet Hirst, Denise Johnson, Phyllis Goodwin, Carol Benjamin, and Jovina Pina; Guards, Judy Luiz, Alberta Norlander, Geraldine Arruda, and Pat Barrow.

The girls are very grateful for the capable leadership and good judgment of Miss Hayes.

One hundred sixty-two

When shall we two meet again? —

When the years have come and gone?

When life's battle's lost or won?

When shall we two meet again?

Now the band plays martial airs,

Stirring souls with dignity;

Thus we end so solemnly

Years of freedom from all cares.

Now the speaker mounts the stage,

Urging us to do great deeds —

To fly high where knowledge leads,

And thus to remold our age.

Now together we depart;

Each one goes his separate way;

But we'll not forget this day —

Joy and sadness in our heart.

When shall we two meet again?

Now we start life's lonely way;

Yet I know there'll be a day

When we two shall meet again.
